'WASHED OUT' AS FLYER, HE FLIES FORTRESS HOME

Bombardier Saves Crippled Bomber.

WITH THE UNITED STATES BOMBER COMMAND IN BRITAIN, Aug. 22 (AP).—A slight young Florida bombardier who "washed out of flying school" and a half conscious pilot with his arm nearly torn off emerged as the heroes today of the great North sea sky battle which saw American Flying Fortresses shoot down or damage 12 German fighters, altho outnumbered 5 to 1.

Airmen who had not been to bed for 36 hours told how the gravely wounded pilot and the bombardier who had never flown a Fortress before brought the big ship back safely yesterday after Nazi bullets had riddled two of the four motors and killed the co-pilot.

A recheck of the crews' reports of the battle showed that four of nine Fortresses on the sortie had done all the fighting against about 25 German planes.

Down 3, Damage 9 Planes.

They shot down three and heavily damaged at least nine, instead of the six originally reported damaged or destroyed. Five other Fortresses in the flight were not attacked.

The bombardier, Second Lieut. Edward T. Sconiers, 26 years old, of De Funiak Springs, Fla., with eyes bloodshot from loss of sleep and nervous tension, reported on the terrific fight of the plane, Johnny Reb, in this manner:

"We were in the tail end formation when we were jumped by about 25 Focke-Wulf 190s and Messerschmitt 109s at over 20,000 feet. They set up a decoy out to our right. I was lying in the nose of the ship shooting at that when over the intercommunicating system I heard the waist gunner shout: 'Here come three more from above.'

Bomber Stays on Course.

"I heard a thud in the pilot's cabin and heard the pilot grunt and ask me to come up."

The Fortress never wavered from its course, altho it lagged behind the formation a little, but when Sconiers entered the cabin he found the pilot covered with blood. His eyes were glazed with pain and his arm half torn off by the cannon shot, which had killed the co-pilot. [Casualty regulations forbid release of the names of the pilot and the co-pilot.]

"I dragged the body of the co-pilot from his seat. It was a terrific job as I had no oxygen mask," Sconiers said.

Battle for Breath.

"I then took his place. The pilot's oxygen mask had been ripped away and he was fighting for breath. He motioned me to take the ship down to 5,000 feet. I never had flown a Fortress before, having been washed out at flying school and coming back as a bombardier. But some way we got down.

"All this time the crew did not know what was going on as the telephone system in the plane had been knocked out."

Sergt. J. C. Simmons of Union, Miss., the tail gunner, interrupted at this point to say:

"I thought we were falling into the sea, altho I did not know a shell had hit the pilot's cabin."

Lands Without a Bounce.

The pilot by this time was only half conscious, the bombardier continued.

"Blood was streaming all over but he kept directing and helping me," he said.

"We were nearing England and saw a flying field and I started to set her down. Somehow between us I got her down without even a bounce. All this time the pilot did not cry out or say one word except to ask for water."

When the rest of the crew reached the ground they heard for the first time that the co-pilot had been killed and the pilot gravely wounded.

Knocks Wings Off a Nazi.

Simmons got one of the three confirmed Nazi planes. He fired a 150 round burst from his .50 caliber machine gun, which he supposed would be good for only a 75 round burst. Great chunks came out of the barrel

SOLOMON ISLANDS IN COLOR MAP

In all issues of tomorrow's TRIBUNE will be presented a new and detailed color map of the Solomon Islands, where American forces launched their first major counterattack against the Japanese in the Pacific and have succeeded in recapturing several of the islands occupied by the enemy.

Navy Accepts New 'Flat Top' for Lakes Duty

BY WARD WALKER.

In the wind and the rain that lashed Chicago's lakefront yesterday a new aircraft carrier was taken into the United States navy.

Under sunny skies, the ceremony would have been impressive; under black skies that poured rain and spewed lightning, then symbolically cleared at the right moment, it was even more so.

Shortly after newsmen were taken aboard the training vessel, U. S. S. Wilmette, the U. S. S. Wolverine—newest navy "flat top" and first ship of her type to sail inland water—hove in sight.

Looks Like Floating Book.

Thru the mist off Madison street, the Wolverine appeared a fantastic sight to a landlubber more than two miles away. Her flight deck, more than 500 feet long, seemed to ride at water level. She looked like a floating book.

Her four funnels poured out smoke. As she neared her hull became visible—the hull that two months ago was the luxurious S. S. Seeandbee, lake pleasure ship, and is now painted the navy's battleship gray.

As her anchor dropped, the ship's company on the Wilmette manned the rail, the Navy pier sailor band on the Wilmette played a rousing march and the official commissioning party came aboard the gunboat from a launch. They were welcomed by Lieut. Comm. J. M. Ross, commander of the 4th naval reserve area and commanding officer of the Wilmette.

Those in the party included Mayor Kelly, Capt. E. A. Lofquist, chief of staff, 9th naval district; Commander R. F. Whitehead, aviation aid to the commandant, 9th naval district; Commander O. F. Heslar, district personnel officer; Commander M. R. Wortley, commanding officer, armed guard naval training school, and Lieut. Comm. Carl G. Olson, senior member, naval aviation cadet selection board.

As the radio hookups on the Wilmette were completed to broadcast the ceremony the storm broke. "Take foul weather parade quarters," boomed the loudspeaker on the Wolverine, and her company, as well as the sailors on the Wilmette, hurried to shelter.

The speeches were finished by Mayor Kelly and the officers in the lee of the Wilmette's superstructure and 20 minutes later, as the commissioning party boarded the Wolverine, the skies cleared in the west and the sunshine broke thru.

The carrier's crew came to attention, resplendent in their white ducks. Out of the opening in the skies hurtled two Grumman Wildcats, the vicious little planes that did much to the Japs in the Coral sea and the battle of Midway.

Ready for Training Service.

One of them was piloted by Lieut. Comm. Edward J. O'Neill, a veteran of Midway, who is in charge of the operational unit at Glenview. Cadets there will use the Wolverine as a training carrier to practice landings and takeoffs under actual sea conditions. It will base at Chicago and operate in Lake Michigan.

On the Wilmette the band played the "Star Spangled Banner," and as if deliberately timed, the two planes circled, then dived on the carrier.

3 KILLED BY DEBRIS AS GALE BLOWS BIG STACK OVER IN GARY

A sudden wind and rainstorm swept over Chicago and the western and southern suburbs yesterday causing the deaths of three steel plant workers in Gary and widely scattered damage to property.

The men killed were at work in a foundry of the Carnegie-Illinois Steel company when the wind toppled a nearby 125 foot steel and brick stack. The débris fell thru the roof and crushed them. They were Walter Szcpaniak, 33 years old, of 1649 Delaware street, Gary; Joseph Zolondz, 53, of Hobart, Ind., and John Libauskas, 48, of 1765 Roosevelt street, Gary.

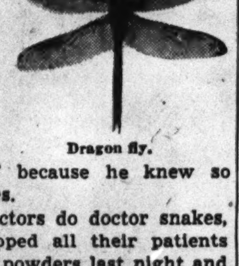
Many trees were uprooted in Gary and in Chicago. In the west and south side areas buildings were struck by lightning. Damage on the north shore was slight. The accompanying rain in downtown Chicago was .49 of an inch and in Gary exceeded an inch. The gauge at the Tribune Experimental farm in Du Page county recorded .60 of an inch of rainfall, while the Tribune rain gauge at Waukegan recorded .54 of an inch.

3 Norwegians Executed for Feeding 2 Russians

LONDON, Aug. 22 (AP).—The Norwegian government in London reported today that German occupation authorities in Norway have executed three Norwegian fishermen for feeding two starving Russians, found stranded on the Island of Mageroya off northern Norway.

Snake Doctors Quit Patients for Big Party

Snake doctors carry no satchels. It's doubtful that they doctor snakes. Some people think that the original snake doctor was just an old dragon fly the neighbors called "Doc" because he knew so many remedies.



Dragon fly.

If snake doctors do doctor snakes, tho, they slipped all their patients pink sleeping powders last night and went out for a party.

Nobody knows where it was, but this much is certain: It was a big one, for the air was black with snake doctors flying over Chicago's south side. They flew at high altitudes, at third or fourth floor levels or right over the roofs of apartment buildings, they were in such a hurry, and folks looking out of windows wondered what all the excitement was about.

Source Is Mystery.

Where they came from, no one knows. William J. Gerhard, associate curator of insects at Field museum, said that of course they came from lakes, or ponds, or streams, but even he didn't know which ones.

Snake doctors live dreary lives in the water for most of their two years of existence, known as nymphs and being gobbled by fish if they're not careful. Then, just when you'd think they were becoming old and staid, they blossom out in the most gorgeous clothes you ever saw, including emerald green hats, brown suits, and dresses and gossamer wings of delicate yellow.

Get Wings, Go Partying.

Once they get the wings, they go out partying. Maybe the peaches are ripening somewhere and they hear that there will be tasty insects around. The gentlemen grab their hats, the ladies powder their noses and they're off to the feast. They hold not stag parties, or ladies' nights, for snake doctor couples are quite devoted.

The dictionary says snake doctors are more correctly called dragon flies, and that dragon flies are harmless and useful, because they eat so many unpleasant insects. Mr. Gerhard says you can call them anything you want to. He frequently calls them snake feeders, devil's darning needles, and mosquito hawks—informally, of course.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil, Aug. 22 (AP).—To the wild cheers of thousands thronging the capital streets in carnival mood, Brazil today formally recognized a state of war between herself and Germany and Italy.

The nation's declaration of a state of belligerency answered months of axis aggression and followed a week filled with demonstrations against the axis sinking of five Brazilian ships with the loss of 600 lives.

Nineteen Brazilian ships have been sunk since the war began, 13 before the outburst of a new submarine campaign this month and one small ship this week.

In a note sent to the German and Italian governments saying the state of belligerency exists, Brazil carefully pointed out she had exhibited great tolerance and peaceful intentions before the attacks on the five vessels off her coast.

"Practiced War Acts."

Then the note concluded:

"There is no way to deny that Germany and Italy practiced war acts against Brazil, creating a belligerent situation which we are forced to recognize in defense of our dignity and sovereignty, our safety and that of America, and to repel it as our forces are able."

Japan was not included in the war declaration, altho Brazil broke diplomatic relations with all three of the axis partners last Jan. 29.

The declaration, which made Brazil the first South American nation to admit open warfare with the axis, came after two days of wild rumors which were climaxed by a meeting of the cabinet of President Getulio Vargas this afternoon.

Indications here were that the Brazilian action might be followed shortly by similar action of other American nations.

Two nations of South America, Chile and Argentina, still maintain relations with the axis, but diplomatic observers regard an early Chilean break as highly probable.

People Shriek With Joy.

Shortly after the announcement was broadcast to the nation, Rio's principal streets were filled with an excited populace, many persons shrieking with obvious joy over actual warfare against the axis.

Many persons leaped on improvised speaker's stands on the tree lined streets to engage in long speeches; elegantly dressed society men and women joined barefooted stevedores and others of all classes in dancing in the streets.

[With Brazil at war against the axis, the united nations now number 29, as follows: The United States, Brazil, Britain, Russia, China, Australia, Belgium, Canada, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czecho-Slovakia, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, India, Luxemburg, Mexico, The Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Philippine Islands, Poland, South Africa, and Jugo-Slavia.]

Argentina Faces Crisis.

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay, Aug. 22.—Brazil's declaration of war on Germany and Italy and the likelihood that Uruguay would follow suit were regarded here as bringing Argentina to a grave crisis in maintenance of her rigid neutrality policy.

Uruguay's course was foreshadowed by observers who believed she would be in the war within 24 hours of Brazil's declaration, and by Foreign Minister Alberto Guani's assurance to Brazilian naval officers and embassy staff that "both the people and government of Uruguay" would be "in entire and complete solidarity with Brazil in the present circumstances."

Guani said he expected to confer immediately with President Baldomir.

Argentina Acts Tomorrow.

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina, Aug. 22 (AP).—President Ramon S. Castillo told newspaper men tonight that the Argentine government would consider Monday its new policy in view of Brazil's entrance into the war. It was considered likely that a special cabinet meeting would be called that day.

U. S. Subs Sink 4 Jap Ships; 1 in Aleutians

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22 (AP).—American submarines, blasting away at Japan's extended lines of communication in the Pacific, have sunk four and damaged two more enemy ships, the navy reported today.

While these successful attacks were carried out independently of the offensive in the Solomon Islands, one was part of a campaign of attrition against Japanese in the Aleutians area.

Destroyer Is Damaged.

The navy gave this account of the action:

In the western Pacific—sunk, two large cargo ships and one large transport; possibly sunk, one destroyer; damaged, one medium sized cargo ship which suffered a torpedo hit.

United States submarines to date have sunk 60 Jap ships of all types, possibly sunk 16, and damaged 15. Much of their work in recent weeks has been done in the Aleutians area, where they have coöperated with surface and air forces to blast enemy merchant and warship concentrations in the vicinity of Kiska Island.

Sinking of the merchant ship raised the enemy's reported losses in the Aleutians to 11 ships sunk, one believed sunk, and 12 damaged.

Cossacks Quit Kuban as Nazi Army Invades

MOSCOW, Aug. 22 (AP).—Their faces black from the rays of the burning sun and the dust of battle, hundreds of old Cossack warriors, with their women and children, were driving a stream of live stock into the Caucasus mountains today rather than let them fall to the Germans.

"The Cossacks have been in many wars," growled 80 year old Nikolai Dmitrivish Onuprienko to a Red Star [army newspaper] correspondent. "They never have become prisoners."

"Come along, father, we must hurry," she told him. The grumbling old warrior trudged along while the women and boys rode oxen and cows, driving their sheep, hogs, and chickens ahead.

The Red Star account was the first story of the mass exodus of the Cossacks from their beloved Kuban villages.

The roads are hot. The sun beats down as the saddened columns of refugees hurry toward the sanctuary of the mountains.

The Cossacks were moving everything moveable into the mountains, determined that the Germans would get nothing, the army newspaper said. They even hastily raided trees in the orchard.

Red army trucks carrying bombs, shells, and wounded soldiers flashed up and down the roads, threading the lines of refugees. The report said the refugees were clogging some highways.

Women Ask to Stay.

The refugee columns passed thru Cossack villages, whence hundreds have gone to fight since July. At one village the people said horsemen galloped off in saddles belonging to their grandfathers and swinging sabers that had passed down to them thru generations.

Sadly the columns moved on toward the high Caucasus mountains.

Some women complained that they wanted to stay at the front, pointing out that the Cossacks do not belong in the rear when wars are being fought near by. But wiser counsel persuaded them that this is the way to win the new type war—what you cannot burn you take with you, leaving the invader as little as you can.

Above the noise of the cattle along the dusty roads bearing the footprints of war came a cry like a chorus: "We will be back."

Nazi Air Chief, 2 Others Killed in Plane Crash

BERNE, Switzerland, Aug. 22.—Maj. Gen. Baron Karl A. Von Gablenz, chief of the Reich ministry of aviation and one of the best known aviators in Germany, was killed today when his service plane crashed near Berlin. Prof. Kruemmel of the Reich ministry of science, and radio officer Lieut. Klaerr, who accompanied him, were also killed. Von Gablenz was piloting the plane when an accident to the controls caused it to crash.

GERMANS CROSS DON, ADVANCE SOUTH OF CITY

MOSCOW, Aug. 23 [Sunday] (AP).—German troops driving relentlessly toward Stalingrad have crossed the Don river southeast of Kletskaya and have rammed a wedge into Russian positions northeast of Kotelnikovo in twin reverses for the soviets, it was reported officially today.

Heavy fighting was reported under way in all sectors as the Germans increased their pressure upon Stalingrad's defenses and in the Caucasus.

[Just how far from Stalingrad the Germans succeeded in crossing the Don was not disclosed, but previous reports said the Nazis were about 40 or 50 miles northwest of the Volga city in the Kletskaya sector.]

Fierce Fighting Rages On.

"Southeast of Kletskaya fierce fighting continued when the enemy attempted to cross to the eastern bank of the Don river. Soviet troops inflicted heavy losses on enemy groups which had crossed the river."

The communique announced, however, that counterattacking Russians in another sector of the Kletskaya front had driven the Germans from several inhabited localities.

The other serious menace to the industrial city on the Volga was from the southwest, in the battlefields northeast of Kotelnikovo. There, the midnight communique said, the Germans "passed to the offensive and succeeded in driving a wedge into the soviet positions."

Annihilate Rumanian Battalion.

"Fifty German tanks were disabled during the day. Heavy fighting is in progress," it added.

In another action in the Kotelnikovo area, the Russians said, the enemy was repulsed, with one battalion of Rumanian infantry being annihilated.

The Russians reported they were on the defensive south of Krasnodar, northern Caucasus city. Two enemy attacks were reported repelled, but in one sector, "after heavy fighting our troops withdrew to new positions," the communique said.

In the Krasnodar sector, about 400 miles southwest of Stalingrad, the Nazis are driving toward the foothills which lead to the Black sea and the Russian naval base of Nororossisk. However, despite the Russian withdrawal in one place on this front, soviet mountain defenses were reported stiffening.

Nazis Pour Tanks Into Battle.

The Germans poured tanks and infantry into the battles on the high plains southeast of Pyatigorsk, where they are threatening the Grozny oil fields, less than 100 miles away.

Soviet flyers yesterday were said to have raided a 400 plane German air base, destroying 100 planes.

With the Germans disregarding immense losses, continuing to send seemingly endless reserves of men and machines into the battles, the Russian position admittedly was critical and deteriorating.

[The Germans said nothing of the fight for Stalingrad. They claimed the capture of Krymskaya, 20 miles northwest of Novorossisk, and Kurtshanskaya, both on the lower Kuban. They said weather and terrain conditions were extremely difficult. Again the Germans spoke of Russian attacks east of Vyazma and Rzhev on the central front.]

Climax of Battle Foreseen.

The coming week should see a climax in the battle for Stalingrad. Dispatches said the Germans were making an all-out effort and it was doubtful whether they could sustain the present attack much longer unless they achieved a major success.

The Red army apparently has a large force still west of the Don, altho the main defense groups are deployed east of the river in the Volga hills.

Well north of Kletskaya, violent battles were renewed in the Voronezh sector. Red Star, the army newspaper, said several thousand axis troops had fallen there in a five day battle and that the Red army constantly was throwing back Hungarian attacks.

QATARRA CANNOT DEFEND BRITISH: COL. M'CORMICK

Warns Military Genius Can Conquer Desert Pit.

Military history is so full of instances in which ingenious commanders have overcome seemingly insurmountable obstacles that the Qatarra depression near the African Mediterranean coast cannot be regarded as an impassable bulwark of British defense in Egypt, Col. Robert R. McCormick, editor and publisher of THE TRIBUNE, asserted last night in a speech over W-G-N, W59C and the Mutual Broadcasting company network.

Expressing the belief that military genius would not long be daunted by Qatarra's desert wastelands, Col. McCormick expressed the hope that when action did develop in that area it would be allied genius making itself felt against the axis forces rather than a surprise axis thrust against Egypt which would catch British defenders napping.

TEXT OF SPEECH

The text of Col. McCormick's speech follows:

"As you well know, after the battle of Tobruk, the British army retreated to a position near El Alamein, forming a front 35 miles long from the Mediterranean to the Qatarra depression.

"It is interesting to note in passing that Qatarra and Qara are words spelled with a Q without a U. I only know of one other such word—Qazvin, a town in Asia Minor.

"The Qatarra depression was caused by the winds blowing desert sands into the Mediterranean, from which they could not return. Most of it is 160 feet below sea level. The depression is something like 200 miles long, and south of it the desert extends almost indefinitely. The Qatarra depression is likened in climate to our Death Valley, but is worse because of the existence of salt marshes over which is a crust thru which animals or vehicles will fall.

Not Satisfactory to Either.

"We may be sure that the position at El Alamein is not satisfactory either to Gen. Alexander or to Gen. Rommel.

"It brings the German airmen entirely too near Alexandria harbor and the Suez canal, and too far from Malta and the landing fields at Derna and Tobruk to satisfy the former, while the latter, of course, wants to take Egypt and continue his offensive from there.

"Whether the battle, when it joins, will be one of sheer ferocity, or whether other expedients will be found we do not know; but it is interesting to remember that in military history apparently impassable obstacles, upon which the defenders depended, were overcome.

"One of the first of these was at Babylon when King Cyrus of Persia faced enormous walls and an adequate garrison supplied for 20 years.

King Diverts a River.

"The Euphrates river ran thru the middle of the town 12 feet deep at low water. In the guise of creating siege works, Cyrus caused enormous ditches to be dug. Then upon a feast night of the Babylonians, he diverted the river into these ditches, marched his army down the river bed, and took the city almost without resistance.

"A still more famous incident was the pass of Thermopylæ. Having acquired Asia Minor, the Persians were attempting the conquest of Greece. They came in such overwhelming numbers that the Greeks did not think they could meet them in the open field. Therefore, a force composed of 6,000 Greeks was posted at the pass of Thermopylæ which the Greeks thought, with their heavier equipment, they could hold indefinitely. And so perhaps they could have done, had not the Persian commander learned of a trail across the mountains. When King Leonidas, commander of the Greek forces, perceived that he was surrounded, he first unsuccessfully endeavored to defeat the forces in his rear, and failing that, charged with his Spartans, who were killed—only one man surviving to bring the news of the catastrophe.

Texan's Words Tell Story.

"This calls to mind that after the annihilation of the garrison of the Alamo in Texas, Gen. Edward Burleson made his famous statement:

"'Thermopylæ had its messenger of defeat.

"'The Alamo had none.'

"Denmark and Sweden were at war in 1658. Denmark was extremely confident because it held control of the sea, but winter brought extremely cold weather. The waters of the Belts [two straits, Great Belt and Little Belt] froze over. An engineer informed King Charles X. of Sweden, who was on the mainland of Denmark, that the ice would bear his soldiers if they were sufficiently spread out.

"The king ordered the advance. He rode his horse to incur the greatest possible danger, but had his cavalrymen lead their horses. The army crossed successfully with the loss of two companies which fell thru the ice.

"Arriving on the Island of Zealand, Copenhagen was threatened. Thus entrapped, the Danes were forced by the treaty of Roskilde to yield nearly half of their territory.

"Napoleon's passage of the St. Bernard pass is one of the famous exploits in history. The Austrians had regained all that he had taken from them in his first Italian campaign and had blockaded Gen. Massena in Turin. The St. Bernard pass was considered impassable until summer, and below it was Fort Bard, supposed to command the road—the Maginot line of its day.

Napoleon Finds a Way.

"Napoleon started his army up the pass on the 14th of May. Cannon could not be drawn on their carriages; they were, therefore, taken apart and put in hollowed logs for protection.

"Gen. Lannes, Napoleon's great advance guard commander, cleared the pass and found a path around Fort Bard, just as the Persians had found one around Thermopylæ 2300 years before, but Lannes had to leave his artillery behind.

"Gen. Marmont, who 14 years later was to surrender supinely the French army, perceived that the fortress cannon could not fire on objects close under the walls and conducted his artillery past the fortress without losing a gun. The fortress surrendered in a few days, and Napoleon embarked on the victorious campaign that was to culminate at Marengo.

"Gen. Grant had assailed Vicksburg for four months. Gen. Sherman was repulsed in an effort to take the fort by storm in December, 1862. Gen. Grant's overland campaign, for the same purpose, was defeated by cavalry raids which cut his supplies. He then came down the river, encamped on the west bank, and made several abortive moves to reach the fort on its north side.

"The batteries of the fort were considered powerful enough to close the river, but on the night of April 16, 1863, the naval fleet and transports ran past the batteries—not without loss. Thirteen days later, Gen. Grant embarked his armies on the transports, landed them south of the fort, and then conducted the famous campaign which ended in the surrender of Vicksburg on the 4th of July, 1863. A year later after his repulse at Cold Harbor he repeated the maneuver and made the surprise march to Petersburg.

"There have been similar surprises in this war, especially the capture of Crete by air borne troops in spite of the British navy.

Alamein Surprise Probable.

"What surprise will be attempted at El Alamein? Will vast quantities of oil and water be assembled for a motorized column to pass around Qatarra? Will some Arab tell one of the leaders of a passable way thru the depression? By taking off the armor and leaving only the guns and the engines in the tanks, will they be able to negotiate its treacherous footing? Or will there be a landing from the Mediterranean in the rear of the enemy's position? Or a vast parachute movement overhead?

"One of these efforts is probable and, judging by history, so is its success. Let us hope it will be our side that makes the attempt."

DRAMATIZE SONG STORIES

Dramatizations of true stories from W-G-N listeners who told how their lives had been affected by the songs, "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life" and "Ol' Man River," marked the program. The W-G-N Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Henry Weber, furnished the musical background. Vocal stars were Marion Claire, soprano, and Thomas L. Thomas, Metropolitan Opera company baritone, who scored heavily when they sang the duet from the third act of Verdi's "Il Trovatore."

RAF TELLS RAIDS ON AXIS SHIPS IN TOBRUK HARBOR

CAIRO, Egypt, Aug. 22 (AP).—British fighter-bombers attacked axis transport encampments and ships in Tobruk harbor between Aug. 19 and Aug. 21, the RAF reported today in a summary of recent air operations in North Africa. Several ships were bombed at Tobruk.

Four German fighters were shot down on Aug. 19, the report said. A German plane was shot down over the Nile delta last night and an Italian plane destroyed off Cyprus, a communique declared. The communique added that RAF planes attacked axis vehicles and troop concentrations Friday, while land activity was confined to artillery exchanges and patrol skirmishes.

One plane was shot down last night as "a small number of enemy aircraft operated over the Alexandria area," RAF headquarters said. [Dispatches from Malta reported five enemy planes were destroyed there on Friday.]

Aircraft Carrier Launched by Woman from Winnetka

Camden, N. The vessel, third to carry the name Independence, was christened by Mrs. Rawleigh Warner of 1200 Hamptondale road, Winnetka, Ill.

F. D. R. TO VARGAS: BRAZIL'S ACTION HASTENS VICTORY

Welcomes the Nation as Brothers in Arms.

BY WILLIAM STRAND.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22.—Brazil was welcomed today into the ranks of the nations fighting actively to crush Hitlerism all over the world.

In a message to President Getulio Vargas of the South American republic, President Roosevelt expressed profound emotion over Brazil's war declaration upon Germany and Italy, and asserted that the action has hastened the inevitable victory over the forces of evil and darkness.

"This solemn decision more firmly aligns the people of Brazil with the free peoples of the world in a relentless struggle against the lawless and predatory powers," Mr. Roosevelt cabled. "It adds power and strength, moral and material, to the armies of liberty.

"As brothers in arms, our soldiers and sailors will write a new page in the history of friendship, confidence, and coöperation which has marked since the earliest days of independence relations between your country and mine.

"Hastens the Victory."

"The action taken today by your government has hastened the coming of the inevitable victory of freedom over oppression, of Christian religion over the forces of evil and darkness."

The state department tonight made public an exchange of messages between President Roosevelt and President Vargas which preceded the declaration of war. Mr. Roosevelt denounced the Nazi sinkings in what was said to be one of the most outspokenly bitter messages in the annals of American diplomacy.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull sent a message to the Brizilian foreign minister, Oswaldo Aranha, which contained a warning to other South American countries that they also face being forced into the war. He asserted Brazil's action was a heavy blow to the axis, "moral no less than military."

"The action of the axis powers in attacking your great country and people," Hull told Aranha, "is a further demonstrartion of the fact that those powers will strike at any peace loving nation as and when to do so will serve their purpose of world conquest, regardless of considerations of humanity and international law.

All Republics in Danger.

It also brings into bold relief the basic principle upon which the solidarity of the American republics rests, namely, that an attack against any one of them is an attack against all of them. Each of the 21 American republics are today equally in danger."

The march of another nation into open war with the axis was warmly hailed in congressional circles. Members of the house and senate emphasized the importance of the fact that for the first time a South American country has now entered the conflict.

"The declaration has been inevitable," said Sen. Walter F. George [D., Ga.], member of the foreign relations committee. "The Brazilians are in a position to make a large contribution toward winning the war."

"It is fine news," said Rep. Pete Jarman [D., Ala.], member of the house foreign affairs committee.

Defense Board to Meet.

"Brazil has taken the only logical action in view of the wanton attacks on shipping in her waters," said Rep. Charles Eaton [R., N. J.], another foreign affairs committee member. "Those attacks showed that Hitler never meant to leave the western hemisphere alone."

A special meeting of the Inter-American Defense board has been set for Monday to consider measures to be taken. The meeting, called by Gen. Amaro Soares Bittencourt, Brazilian delegate, was originally set for this afternoon but was postponed to assure the presence of all the members. It is composed of representatives of all the 21 American republics.

Seaman Is Exonerated in Death of Chicagoan

Anthony Okoren, 25 years old, a merchant seaman, held since last Sunday in connection with the death of Wilbur Floyd Kelly, 42, of 9501 Ewing avenue, was exonerated yesterday by a coroner's jury. Okoren said Kelly fell in the street in front of his home while intoxicated, and that no one had touched the man. Two other witnesses corroborated the story.

Twelve of the 21 American republics now are at war against the axis, seven others have broken diplomatic relations, and two retain relations with Berlin-Rome-Tokio.

After Brazil's war declaration Uruguay gave evidence of following suit, and Chile is inclining toward breaking off diplomatic relations with the axis. Here is the lineup of the Americas:

At war—United States, Mexico, Brazil, Cuba, Haiti, Dominican Republic, Gautemala, El Salvador, Costa Rica, Panama, Honduras, Nicaragua.

Maintaining relations—Argentina, Chile.

DIES ON VISIT TO SON.

Meyer Greentree Baker, 79 years old, came to Chicago from his home in Des Moines, Ia., yesterday to visit his son, Con James Baker of 2034 Eastwood avenue. The elder Baker, a decorator, collapsed and died at Dearborn and Van Buren streets.

BRAZIL FORCED IN WAR BY MONTHS OF AXIS INSULTS

Spies and U-Boat Attacks Aroused People.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Brazil broke off diplomatic relations with all three axis powers Jan. 29 at the conclusion in Rio de Janeiro of the Pan-American conference of foreign ministers which unanimously adopted a resolution recommending that all the American republics immediately expel axis diplomats.

From then on, Brazil was gradually and reluctantly drawn closer to war by axis machinations inside her borders and by attacks on her shipping by far ranging U-boats.

The first major provocation came in March when a U-boat sank a Brazilian ship off the coast.

More sinkings followed and the Brazilian temper rose almost to the pitch of open belligerency. The first known blow struck by Brazil came in May when Brazilian airmen were credited with sinking a submarine.

Five Sunk in Week.

Then came a lull until last week, when five Brazilian ships were sunk while traveling coastwise, among them a Brazilian army transport from which 169 officers and men were lost at sea and 88 soldiers were saved. The total loss of military and civilian personnel in the five sinkings was more than 600.

President Getulio Vargas' next move was to order the seizure as hostages of German nationals—diplomats excepted—who already were aboard two repatriation ships on which they had hoped to get home.

Counterblows were struck quickly by both United States and Brazilian airmen last week. Three submarines were declared sunk, one by direct bomb hits scored by Lieut. Comm. Jack Lacey in a United States navy bomber, another by two American airmen and the third by unspecified means but presumably by air attack.

The United States-Brazilian air forces are constantly engaged in aerial patrols on the lookout for submarines all along Brazil's 5,000 mile coastline.

Brazil as the largest of the Latin American republics follows the next largest, Mexico, into declaration of war. Brazil and Mexico stood together as leaders at the Rio conference for solidarity against the axis.

Parallel with World War I.

Unrestricted U-boat warfare also drew Brazil into the last war as the only South American ally against Germany. Brazil broke relations in April, 1917, over the sinking of a Brazilian ship off the French coast, and, after additional sinkings, declared war in October, 1917. She sent a naval fleet to European waters, sent aviators and a medical mission to France and opened all her resources to the allies.

Brazil, with 3,275,510 square miles and 46,000,000 population, is larger than the United States.

The Brazilian navy includes two battleships, the Minas Gerais and Sao Paulo, each 19,200 tons. They were built in 1907 but were modernized in 1940. The navy also has the 3,150 ton cruisers Bahia and Rio Grande do Sul, one destroyer plus nine being built, six 560 ton torpedo boats, four submarines, and numerous minelayers, river monitors, and other auxiliaries.

According to information available, the Brazilian army consists of 100,000 trained troops, plus reserves of perhaps another 300,000. On April 8, President Vargas signed a decree which might boost the army to 1,200,000 men.

CONSUL FOR BRAZIL HAPPY HIS COUNTRY JOINED ALLIES IN WAR

E. C. Souza, 191 East Walton street, midwest consul for Brazil, yesterday said he was happy that his country had declared war on the axis powers and become an ally of the United States, Great Britain, China, and the other nations opposing aggression.

Brazil, Souza said, has plenty of air bases from which to operate planes against the axis, but needs airplanes from the United States and pilots to fly them. He said Brazil also would have to depend upon the United States for guns, ammunition, and other military supplies.

The consul said Brazil has started on a five-year rubber program which eventually would supply the United States with a large part of its rubber needs. The difficulty in producing rubber, heretofore, he said, has been wage competition and transportation of the rubber out of the jungle.

MARINES ADOPT SUBMACHINE GUN FOR SPECIAL JOBS

Deadly at Close Range; Ideal 'Chute Weapon.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22.—The Reising submachine gun has been adopted as a supplementary .45 caliber weapon by the marine corps, the navy department announced today. The gun is especially suited for use by parachute troops.

Several thousand already have been issued, it was revealed. Experts from the marine barracks at Quantico, Va., are visiting all posts and teaching personnel thruout the corps to handle the new weapon.

The navy announcement stated that paratroops and other special assault units were the first to receive the gun, described as deadly at close range.

Serves Many Special Needs.

It is said to be effective at ranges up to 300 yards and suitable for use by mechanized troops, airborne infantry, vehicle operators and others whose duties require a short and light yet high powered and accurate weapon.

Two models are in use by the marines. One has the conventional solid stock and closely resembles an ordinary rifle in appearance. The other has a folding steel frame stock and pistol grip, providing a light and compact weapon.

The latter model, weighing only 6½ pounds, was designed for parachute troops, enabling them to jump while carrying guns of high fire power, the navy revealed. It was developed at the suggestion of marine corps weapon experts.

Fires 400 Shots Per Minute.

The Reising submachine gun uses standard .45 caliber ammunition, firing at the rate of 400 to 450 rounds per minute with full automatic adjustment. It also is capable of semiautomatic operation—one shot at a time with automatic reload. Its muzzle velocity is 300 yards per second.

A snub-nosed .45 caliber bullet will penetrate six inches of white pine at 20 yards.

Of simple construction, the gun has only three moving parts. Loaded magazines may be inserted swiftly. It is said the weapon does not "buck" as much as similar guns when long bursts are fired. It is air cooled. Reloading is accomplished by a delayed blowback.

RAF RAIDS DIEPPE GUN POSTS; FEW SOLDIERS SIGHTED

LONDON, Aug. 22 (AP).—Flying low over Dieppe, France, today, royal air force Spitfires silenced an anti-aircraft fire post with cannon fire. They reported it was the only opposition they encountered. The planes swooped down on the town at an altitude of less than 1,000 feet. The pilots reported they saw only a few soldiers and that the main coastal artillery battery was inactive.

Four Spitfires attacked another gun position east of Dieppe. Wireless masts also were raked with gunfire and here, too, Germany's heavy gun batteries did not appear to be manned. An additional heavy gun battery at Dieppe was shot up by Spitfires. They also machine gunned light gun positions. One pilot described the heavy gun posts as "burned out."

Two Polish Squadrons attacked targets in northern France. One factory was left in flames. Other targets included railway engines, two air fields, and gun positions. German troops were machine gunned at an air field and in the Ostend-Bruges area.

GERMANS POUND BRITISH CONVOY 2D DAY, REPORT

LISBON, Portugal, Aug. 22 (AP).—German bombers for the second day continued to pound at a British convoy off southern Portugal, a message from Portimao said tonight.

The convoy, consisting of eight merchant ships and a warship escort, was attacked yesterday about 200 miles northwest of Gibraltar, the report said.

Results of today's engagement were not known, but a correspondent at Portimao said "a violent battle must have taken place, judging from the duration and intensity of gunfire which was heard distinctly on shore."

CUBA BARS ALL EUROPEANS TO CURB NAZI SPIES

HAVANNA, Cuba, Aug. 22 (AP).—Cuba put in force today an order to halt all immigration from Europe, and to suspend all citizenship petitions now under consideration in a move to curb fifth column and espionage activities.

Under the regulation, announced by the ministry of state, no Cuban consular or diplomatic agents in Europe will be authorized to issue visas for entry into Cuba without specific authority of the ministry of state.

This will give the central government opportunity to revise every such application, and it was taken as a foregone conclusion that requests for visas would be denied automatically, except in extraordinary cases.

ROOSEVELTS GET NEWS OF JIMMY FROM THE PRESS

F. D. R. Has No Other Facts, Secretary Says.

BY WILLIAM STRAND.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22.—President and Mrs. Roosevtl have joined countless other American parents in eager reading of the war news for word of their sons in uniform, it was revealed today. Only thru newspaper dispatches did they learn that their eldest son, James, had taken part in the raid by United States marines on Makin Island.

According to a White House announcement, the Roosevelts had no knowledge of the whereabouts or activities of their son until the story of the battle was told to the nation. A navy department communique named Maj. James Roosevelt as having been second in command of the raiding party.

Stephen T. Early, White House secretary, said Presidential aides did not disturb Mr. Roosevelt when the communique was issued last night.

Asks Early About It.

"The President and Mrs. Roosevelt saw it in the papers for the first time this morning," he explained. "They had no more information about their son than do other fathers and mothers."

Early said that when he saw the President this morning, Mr. Roosevelt asked him if he had seen where Jimmy was "in a show."

"While we were together," Early continued, "Mrs. Roosevelt came in and asked the President if he could tell her any more details than were published in the morning papers. He said no; that he didn't know any more."

Was Under Fire Before.

The eldest Roosevelt son has been in the marines since 1936, when he was commissioned a lieutenant colonel so he might act as aide to his father on a trip to South America. Later he voluntarily reduced his rank to captain and has been on active duty since 1940. He was first under fire while on a mission to the middle east earlier this year.

The President's three other tall sons are also in uniform and holders of commissions. Elliott, who leaped into the air corps as a captain, was recently promoted to lieutenant colonel. His original appointment in the midst of the 1940 Presidential campaign, when other men were facing a call to the colors as privates in the draft, became a famous side issue in his father's drive for a third term. Franklin Jr., is a lieutenant in the navy, while his brother, John, is in the navy supply corps holding the rank of ensign.

Says Japs Train Malayans as 'Propaganda Troops'

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22 (AP).—Japan is training natives taken in Burma and Malaya as "propaganda troops" for use in the battle for India, Sirdar J. J. Singh, president of the India League of America, reported today. Singh, a New York importer and former member of the All-India Congress party said the Indians and Burmese would be sent out with the message that "we are allowed to bear arms and be free men by the Japanese, something the British never let us do."

REVEAL YANKEE BOMBERS PAVED WAY IN SOLOMONS

They Turned Into Fighters to Soften Up Japs.

Bomb 2 Jap Airdromes

GENERAL MacARTHUR'S HEADQUARTERS, Australia, Aug. 23 [Sunday]—(AP).—Allied heavy bombers dropped eight tons of bombs on the airfield at Rabaul, New Britain, one of Japan's major invasion bases, a communique said today. Fires were started. Japanese planes at nearby Lae airdrome also were bombed.

Both attacks were made at night.

AN AIRFIELD IN THE PACIFIC [Delayed]—(AP).—American army bombers from bases hewn out of tropical jungles participated in early softening-up raids on the Solomon Islands, where the United States marines and allied ships drove to victory in the first major offensive against the Japanese in the Pacific.

It was told today, for the first time, how these bombers engaged in dogfights with speedy Japanese Zero fighter planes, one bomber shooting down four Zeros and putting three others to flight, then proceeding on its bombing mission.

Ex-grid Star Leads Bombers.

Another raid participant was Col. L. G. Saunders of Aberdeen, S. D., once a famous tackle on the West Point football team, who commanded an undisclosed number of bombers. He told of the destruction of 11 Zero fighters and two enemy flying boats during an action in which only one American plane was lost.

Saunders' bombers hit the Japanese on the ground and in the air.

"All three services, the marines, the navy, and the army, operated with complete unity," he said.

"I see no reason why a unified command should not continue to operate successfully in the Pacific area. Definitely, it will not be an easy job to beat the Japs back to Japan, but I believe it can be done."

Saunders said that beside the 11 Zero fighters downed by his bomber crews "we got two big four-motored Japanese seaplanes.

"'We dropped bombs on the seaplanes just as they were taking off from Tulagi harbor.

"On one of these missions I flew with Lieut. Fritz Waskowitz as my wingman. Fritz, as you may recall, was once an all-coast football star at the University of Washington.

7 Attack 'The Blue Goose.'

"Seven fighters attacked us that day. I saw them coming toward us out of the sun and figured they'd head for me since my plane was the leading element.

"Instead, they hit Fritz's plane. They kept working him over and gave me very little attention.

"The Blue Goose was hit by cannon fire and nearly lost a wing. After it was all over we figured Fritz got all the extra play because the Japs figured some one really important was riding in a special blue plane.

"Incidentally, our flight got three of those seven planes that worked Fritz over."

The colonel paid high tribute to men and officers for their fine spirit and initiative.

"Some of the crews worked all day loading their planes, then flying them. One crew had to use hand buckets to load a couple of thousand gallons of gasoline one night. Many crews loaded bombs by hand. We operated under conditions and over distances that we didn't dream of a year ago," he said.

"The boys got pretty proud of their dogfighting tactics and on one of the last few days of our operations they were chasing after Jap pursuit planes whenever they'd sight them."

NORMA SHEARER.

Hollywood, Cal., Aug. 22 (AP).—Norma Shearer of the movies and Martin Arrouge, ski jumper eight years her junior, will be married tomorrow—but financially their lives will be conducted separately. The time and place of the ceremony remained a secret.

Financial arrangements between the actress, who gave her age as 36 when she applied for a license, and the 28 year old Arrouge [pronounced Arrowjay] were explained by Miss Shearer in a statement which also spiked reports that when Producer Irving Thalberg died six years ago he left her fabulously wealthy.

"Rumors that have existed for the past six years that I had inherited a six to 10 million dollar estate from my husband are not true," she declared.

"The prenuptial agreement between Mr. Arrouge and myself concerns personal property acquired from my work in motion pictures, in which he waives all community property rights."

That, Arrouge appended, is exactly the way he wants it.

"I love her and I don't want any of her money. I am marrying her for herself. I expect to go into the army air forces very soon, and I have always been able to make a good living."

5,000 TO ENACT FOREIGN GROUP FESTIVAL TODAY

Depict Share in U. S. Melting Pot.

More than 5,000 members of 24 foreign language groups will take part in a festival of tableaux and song at 2 p. m. today in Soldiers' field. The show will be presented by the foreign language division of the Illinois State Council of Defense as part of Illinois National day.

"The Making of an American" is the title of the pageant that will be a highlight of the festival. Opening with the migration of foreign born men and women to America, the pageant, thru a series of tableaux, will depict the contributions of those people to their new homeland, and will conclude with the portrayal of Illinois as the "melting pot" of the nation.

Hungarian language groups will portray "Lincoln's Hungarian Heroes," based on American-Hungarians who contributed 4,000 enlisted men in the Union army during the Civil war. The total Hungarian population in the United States at that time was 8,000. Four Hungarian Civil war heroes, Maj. Gen. Alexander Asboth, Maj. Gen. Julius Stahel-Szamwald, Maj. Charles Zagonvi, and Col. Geza Mihalotzy, will be represented.

Filipino-Americans will portray the Filipinos who fought beside American soldiers in the battle of Bataan.

Other groups which will present tableaux are: Chinese, Syrian, Greek, Norwegian, Italian, French, Belgian, Polish, German, Danish, Russian, Swedish, Jugo-Slavian, Lithuanian, Ukrainian, Czecho-Slovakian, and Mexican.

The pageant was written by Prof. John Zvetina of Loyola university.

CHINESE CAPTURE 2 TOWNS; WIDEN HOLD ON RAIL LINE

Japs Routed in Kiangsi; New Retreat Foreseen.

CHUNGKING, China, Aug. 22 (AP).—The recapture of Yushan and Yingtun in Kiangsi province has extended the Chinese hold on the middle section of the Chekiang-Kiangsi railway to a width of 80 miles, the Chinese Central News agency declared today.

The agency noted that the occupation of these cities, as well as of Shangjao, Kweiki, and Kwangfeng, within 48 hours is a feat never before accomplished by the Chinese.

Vital Airfield at Yushan.

Yingtun, meaning Eagle Pond, was an obscure station which became a boom town after the Japanese snipped off two ends of the Chekiang-Kiangsi railway. Yingtun, 70 miles southeast of Nanchang, the Japanese base in Kiangsi, and 10 miles north of Kweiki, represents the westernmost recovery of the line by the Chinese.

Yushan, meaning Jade mountain, formerly was the site of an important Chinese airfield which the Japanese considered a real advance base for air attacks on Japan proper, the agency said. It is only about five miles from the Chekiang border in Kiangsi province and is the easternmost advance of the Chinese in fighting for the railroad.

Retreat from Kiangshan Seen.

With Chinese occupation, the town became the first Japanese bombing base to revert to Chinese control. Japanese bombing bases still include the railway town of Chuhsien.

Large fires burning in Kiangshan indicate the Japanese are preparing to abandon that railway town in Chekiang, near the Kiangsi border, according to front line dispatches.

GEN. CHENNAULT CONTINUES AS AIR LEADER IN CHINA

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22 (AP).—Brig. Gen. Claire L. Chennault, who led the American Volunteer Group in their warfare against the Japanese in China, will retain command of United States fliers in China.

The war department explained today that the appointment of Brig. Gen. Clayton L. Bissell as commander of American air forces in China, Burma and India, announced in New Delhi yesterday by Lieut. Gen. Joseph Stilwell, would not affect Chennault, who will command air forces permanently stationed in China.

Bissell heads the 10th air force, which is based in India and may operate in Burma and China. He was appointed to succeed Maj. Gen. Lewis H. Brereton, transferred to the Near East.

Chinese Regain Rail Centers

CALM IN INDIA IS CALLED PRELUDE TO NON-VIOLENCE

BOMBAY, India, Aug. 22 (AP).—Seasoned political observers, refusing to be deceived by India's uneasy calm after the violence that followed Mohandas K. Gandhi's arrest, said today "ungoverned violence may be tapering off, but nonviolence is just beginning."

In the two weeks since Gandhi and other Indian Nationalist leaders were arrested, repercussions of their drive have been felt in every province in India. How soon his adherents may utilize strikes as a weapon can only be surmised, but there has been a steady increase in disturbances in outlying villages. Two village districts have been fined 5,000 Rupees each for sabotage.

Feeling still is high in Bombay, altho there has been no violence in nearly a week. Officially the markets are still open, but trading has virtually ceased.

SEEK FILLING STATION BANDITS.

Police yesterday were searching for two bandits who held up filling stations at 222 North Halsted street and 568 Washington street Friday night and stole a total of $74.

Iraq Held Ready to Fight Nazis if They Pass Caucasus

New York, Aug. 22 (AP).—Gen. Nuri Pasha Es-said, premier of Iraq, said his country would "declare war and fight on the side of the allies" if the Germans break thru the Caucasus, a British broadcast reported today. The Iraq premier was said to have challenged Mohandas K. Gandhi of India to "ask the Japanese to withdraw from China and other occupied territories before asking the British to withdraw from India."

A message we should like to convey to millions of women . . .

We are one of the world's largest sources of raw furs, as we are a marketing organization for thousands of mink and silver fox breeders in this country.

Fur breeders have devoted all their skill and efforts to producing silver fox and mink with the magnificence, the brilliance, the lustre that make these furs so beautiful and such great favorites of fashion. Their years of striving to make even greater the beauty of these furs have culminated this season in some of the most exquisite pelts we have ever seen.

Prices are most attractive right now and it is our opinion that this is the most opportune time for women to own a garment of mink or silver fox.

200 AUSTRALIANS STORM A MARKET TO BUY POTATOES

Lucky Ones' Names Drawn from a Hat.

BY E. R. NODERER.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

SOMEWHERE IN AUSTRALIA, Aug. 22.—The mysterious war going on in the Solomons gives Australians the feeling that they are sitting on a powder keg which might blow up any minute.

No news of the campaign is ever released here, where military authorities claim they know nothing about it. What news there is comes from Washington communiques or in quotations from provincial British papers, such as the Yorkshire Post, which altho 15,000 miles from the scene of the battle, seems to have crystal gazers on its staff.

While awaiting with great interest further reports of the Solomons engagement, Australians are pushing ahead with solutions to many new problems.

Scramble for Potatoes.

Altho the Australians have been in the war for three years, shortages of things like potatoes are only now beginning to be felt. Twenty-three bags were sold by lot in Sydney today when 200 people stormed a fruit and vegetable market. The customers put their names in a hat and winners greeted their good fortune with cries of delight. Each 145 pound bag sold for $3.95, or about 2¾ cents a pound.

Sydney cafes are coming up with a lot of new wrinkles on menus to disguise the fact that potatoes are missing. Some diners find a heap of finely shredded lettuce beside their meat. Sliced beets on lettuce is another, as is a mixture of cauliflower and fish, strangely intertwined. Rice and spaghetti appear frequently.

There is some talk of meat rationing, but nothing has been done about it yet.

In the "wanted to exchange" column in a Melbourne paper a woman offered to barter six pounds of butter, six dozen eggs, six pounds of honey, and a pair of dressed fowls for a frock, a pair of low heeled shoes, and a wide brimmed hat.

Prime Minister John Curtin said clothing rationing has increased savings bank deposits by half a million dollars each week. The government expects the national saving to reach 150 million dollars a year as a result of the rationing. Officials expect most of this to go into war bonds.

British Experts Coming.

Two British representatives to the Australian food council are en route here to help Australians develop this country into a great long range food storehouse. The plan involves placing thousands of Australian men back on the farms. The Britishers were invited to impress them with the seriousness of the Australian man power available for rural industries.

The only two ways to increase the labor available for farms is to release men now in the Australian armed forces or to import workers from the United States or Britain.

Australian officials are said to hope that Britain and America will send greatly increased land, sea, and air personnel here so Australians can be released for farm work.

AIR SUPPLY WORK NO GLAMOR JOB, SAYS GEN. BRETT

Miami Beach, Fla., Aug. 22 (AP).—Lieut. Gen. George H. Brett, second in command to Gen. MacArthur in the southwest Pacific, today told a graduating class at the army air forces technical command they face a grim task with "no glory and no glamor" in supplying the nation's fighting aviators.

Gen. Brett.

He described to newly commissioned second lieutenants problems they would face in Australia, where he reported one trainload of supplies traveling 1,600 miles to a battle station would have to be unloaded again and again so as to travel over four railroads of various gauges.

"The difficulty of supply increases manyfold," he continued, "when you consider that your source of supplies is 6,000 miles away and the receipt of the average shipment will be from a month to six weeks."

Hitler Calls Rundstedt to Explain Dieppe Raid

LONDON, Aug. 22 (AP).—A Tass official Russian news agency dispatch said today Adolf Hitler had summoned Field Marshal Karl Rudolf Gerd von Rundstedt to Berlin to explain the Dieppe raid. Rundstedt is responsible for protecting Germany's western flank and lately had been reported on an inspection tour of the coastal defenses.

Fortress Pilot

but the gun held together. Technical men called the showing "a tribute to American workmanship."

"I let fly with everything I had from about 300 yards and the wings started falling off the Focke-Wulf 190," Simmons said. "I caught a glimpse of her going down, but I was so busy right then firing at other ships that I didn't see her end."

Illinoisan's Plane Gets One.

Second Lieut. Malcolm K. Andresen, 24 years old, of Hixton, Wis., navigator of another Fortress. Bat Out of Hell, flown by Capt. Robert Coulter, 28, of La Grange, Ill., claimed another Focke-Wulf.

"I fired a burst and the German plane seemed to start disintegrating in midair," he said.

Another Hoosier in Battle.

Sergt. Raymond C. Lewis, 20 years old, of Middleville, Mich, said he thought he got one plane. "It started smoking and the last I saw it headed toward shore close to the water," he added.

Other participants in the battle were First Lieut. L. S. Rolfe, 25, of Virginia, Ill., a co-pilot, and Second Lieut. Howard Snyder, 24, of Fort Wayne, Ind.

SEA LORDS BREAK TRADITION; LAUD LOST BRITISH SUB

Sank 20 Enemy Ships in Short Career.

LONDON, Aug. 22 (AP).—The career of his majesty's submarine Upholder, one of the most brilliant in the royal navy, has ended on her 25th Mediterranean patrol, the admiralty disclosed tonight in a communique which departed from the usually restrained official language to pay a rare tribute to the lost vessel and her captain and crew.

In a short career [naval directories indicate she was built after the war began but do not give the year] the 615 ton Upholder sank three enemy submarines, a destroyer, and an armed trawler and 15 transports totaling more than 122,000 tons. She probably sank a cruiser and a destroyer and two merchant ships and probably hit another cruiser.

Sank Three Great Ships.

Among the ships she was known to have destroyed were the large and laden Italian transport Conte Rosso, 17,800 tons; and the Neptuna and Oceania, each 19,500 tons.

Guided by young Lieut. Comm. M. D. Wanklyn, holder of the prized Victoria cross and the distinguished service order, the Upholder was successful in at least 23 of the 36 attacks she made on the enemy. Yet, in the naval tradition, her service was secret.

Apology for Praise.

Today the admiralty told what those exploits were, and with an introductory note of apology for such a departure from stiff formality, declared:

"Such was the standard of skill and daring set by Lieut. Comm. Wanklyn and the officers and men under him that they and their ship became an inspiration not only to their own flotilla but to the fleet. The ship and her company are gone, but their example and inspiration remain."

An admiralty press notice giving the Upholder's record additionally declared that her distinction was achieved "not by luck nor opportunist exploitation of a single incident, but by careful planning and brilliant handling." The notice said that every time the Upholder sailed "it was a foregone conclusion that she would report greater discomfiture of the enemy."

FINNS SAY THEY STAY ON DEFENSE TO AVOID U. S. IRE

Claim It Would Be Easy to Cut Red Rail Line.

BY DONALD DAY.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Aug. 22.—Finnish military officers have informed this Tribune correspondent that the Murmansk railroad, important Russian supply route from the Arctic, could have been cut without much trouble at any time during the last eight months—but neither the Germans nor the Finns cared to attack the railroad.

The Finns, these officers said, had no wish to incur the anger of the United States by assuming the offensive against America's soviet allies. And the Germans, they added, wish the railroad to remain open to entice more allied convoys into attempting to reach Murmansk, because these convoys must pass thru an Arctic area infested by Nazi submarines and warplanes.

Finland still considers herself a neutral, and has restricted her fighting to defensive operations since the United States threatened to break diplomatic relations if the Finns advanced further against the Murmansk railroad. Finnish forces have not advanced since last December.

Threatened at 3 Points.

The Murmansk railroad is threatened at three points. The Finns on the Rukajarvi sector are 40 miles away from Soroka, where the railroad branches east around the foot of the White sea to connect with the line stretching from Archangel to Vologda.

Since the Germans took over this sector this summer there has been no further advance toward Louhi. Farther north, where the Germans are some 30 miles from Kandalaksha, where the railroad leaves the White sea and crosses the Kola peninsula to Murmansk, the front also has remained stable this year.

Nazi Inactivity "Explained."

Liaison officers stationed at the headquarters of Lieut. Gen. Eduard Dietl, commander in chief of the German Arctic front, have reported an incident which explains the inactivity of the Germans in the north.

When replacement troops arrived from Germany, Gen. Dietl informed the officers that for the present it was unnecessary to attempt to gain further territory in their sector. He said the German high command had decided to leave the Murmansk railroad open as bait to entice the allies to send further convoys to Murmansk.

But the sea route to both Murmansk and Archangel passes around the North Cape into the Arctic ocean, where great convoy battles have been fought this year.

According to reports of Finns whom I have known for many years, the Germans have more than 1,000 planes stationed near the Arctic coast. Submarine bases also have been constructed in the fjords and the garrisons are said to be sufficiently large to repel a landing, even of large allied forces.

RECEIVE DEATH LETTER OF SON KILLED IN WAR

A letter found in the effects of Capt. Gilbert I. Omens, Chicagoan who was killed July 26 while battling the Nazis in England as a member of the American Eagles squadron of the royal air force, has been received by his father, J. M. Omens, 1055 Ainslie street.

The letter, written by the captain to be forwarded in the event of his death, urged his parents not to grieve and expressed his belief that he had not died in vain; it added: "I feel lucky and honored to throw my whole weight into the scale. For this I thank God and you."

FINNISH FINANCE MINISTER SPURNS PEACE WITH REDS

HELSINGFORS, Finland, Aug. 22 (AP).—Finland has "shut its ears" to all proposals to make a separate peace with Russia, Finance Minister Vaino Tanner said today at Enso on the first anniversary of the recapture of that community from the Russians.

Tanner said that suggestions for a separate peace are being made to Finland "because the enemy is in distress. But we have been made wiser by repeated deceptions. Finns no longer trust such a peace, or any new agreements with their eastern neighbor."

To achieve security in the future Finns are obliged to continue "their present mode of life—with a rifle in the hand, no matter how gladly they would cease fighting," he asserted.

THIS is a war of speed—a radio war. Commands and messages must go through like lightning. Never have communications been so vital to victory, and never have new devices meant so much.

The whole responsibility for "getting the message through" is in the hands of the U. S. Army Signal Corps. Hands that install and maintain countless thousands of radio sending and receiving sets—hands that adjust the marvelous mechanisms of America's newest and most secret weapons—hands that flash the orders to attack!

Now—today—the Signal Corps needs your skill in this thrilling branch of service. You may already be an expert in radio or another communications field. If so, there is no more worth-while service you can render your nation than as a Signal Corps soldier. You may have no more than ambition and a love of mechanics and electricity. In that case the Signal Corps is ready to give you thorough training—at good pay! It's the opportunity of a lifetime to serve your country and prepare for a future career.

HOW YOU CAN GET IN NOW

1. ENLISTMENT

If you are 18 to 45 and physically fit, you may apply for enlistment direct in the Signal Corps or in the Signal Corps Enlisted Reserve.

Direct Enlistment: Experience as a licensed radio operator, a trained radio repairman, a telephone or telegraph worker, will qualify you for active duty at once. From Private's pay you can advance rapidly as you earn higher technical ratings—up to $138 a month, with board, shelter and uniforms.

Enlisted Reserve: If you are skilled with tools but lack qualifying experience, you may enter the Enlisted Reserve. You will be given training, with pay, in one of the many Signal Corps schools, and ordered to active duty when you have completed the course.

Commissions: Graduate electrical engineers may apply for immediate commissions in the Signal Corps. And special opportunities for training and commissions are open to Juniors and Seniors in electrical engineering colleges.

2. CIVILIAN TRAINING

If you are over 16 years of age, and even though registered for Selective Service, have not received your order to report for induction, the Signal Corps offers you an outstanding opportunity.

If you have ability with tools—if you want to secure training in the vitally important field of communications—you may attend a school in or near your home city. You will be paid not less than $1020 per year while learning. And when you have finished your training—in 9 months or less—you can advance to higher pay as your technical skill increases.

Even if you have a minor physical handicap, Signal Corps Civilian Training may give you the chance you've wanted to serve the Army of the United States.

WHAT'S IN HEART OF A YANK GOING TO MEET DEATH?

Letters of Missing Hero Give Brave Answer.

Westfield, N. J., Aug. 22 [Wide World].—Off on a particularly perilous flight, Capt. Arthur La Roe of Westfield, army air force medical officer, put his thoughts on paper. He put down love and encouragement for his wife, but for their sons, Thomas, 19 years old, and Robert, 17, he put down his doubt of reaching a "tiny island" and charged them to carry on.

One day after the letters were delivered there came to the La Roe home a telegram that the captain was four days overdue on a long flight. No word has come since.

"Little Reason for Worry."

To his wife the soldier-surgeon wrote:

"Dearest:

"The fact that you get this will mean that we've completed the next jump [to the take-off point for a long ocean hop to a tiny island]. I wrote this on the way. We're here for a day or two to rest up, check everything extra carefully and then hop off some night before midnight. There is very little reason for worry, for every possible precaution is being thrown around the next two hops. Johnny simply says he won't let us go till he's sure everybody will make it. We will. Loads of love, Dad."

But to his elder son Capt. La Roe wrote:

"Tom:

"I'm leaving now, tonight, on the greatest adventure of a long and very full life. There's no call for worry if it fails, but I do want you and Bob to stick together and help each other to see things thru. You're the older, so a little more of the responsibility falls on you. Take it and carry it. It will help to make a better man of you. My one wish is that you be a credit to your name—be good to Mother and treat Bob with a brotherly respect. If I can know that I don't mind trying this jump. There is a serious question if we ever find our landing spot, but we'll do our best; you do yours always. Loads of love, Dad."

Urges Boy to Help Mother.

And to the younger lad:

"Bob:

"This is the zero hour so far in my almost 51 years. If we get by the next 24 or 48 hours, we'll probably be all right for a good many more years. If we don't I want to be sure you'll do your best. Do it on your own, for your own sake. It pays well in the end. Get along with Tom, help Mother all you can and honor your name—it has never been sullied. Don't let it be now. I'm counting on you. And if I come back at all, I'll never leave again. We'll stick together, won't we? Loads of love, Dad."

STATE WAR BOND QUOTA FOR MONTH LAGS BY 10 PCT.

Illinois is failing by about 10 per cent to meet its August war bond quota of $57,500,000 on the basis of sales during the first three weeks of the month, Norman B. Collins, administrator of the Illinois war savings staff, said yesterday.

In an effort to meet the quota, and to make up for ground lost during June and July, when quotas were not met, the 800 volunteers comprising the war savings staff force will conduct a special "V-Days" drive starting tomorrow and continuing thru Friday, Collins announced.

The coast guard and the treasury department announced a joint program to sell war bonds and seek coast guard enlistments. The 65 foot launch Valhalla, owned by John Warp, Chicago, will carry Lawrence Welk and his orchestra to the north bank of the river at the Michigan avenue bridge for a program at 11 a. m. Tuesday. Several entertainers will assist the orchestra, bonds will be sold, and the coast guard recruiting station at the southwest tower of the bridge will interview applicants.

BOY, 4, INJURED IN FALL.

Royal Rank, 4 years old, suffered a fracture of the skull yesterday when he fell from the front porch of his home at 6061 South La Salle street. He was taken to St. Bernard's hospital.

SHE'S GIRL FRIEND OF 3,000 YANKS; WRITES TO EACH

Each month more than 3,000 members of the army, navy, and marine corps address personal letters to Miss Jane Hathaway in Chicago. As a result, the letters are answered promptly with chatty, brightly written personal replies from Miss Hathaway, whom they have never seen.

In each case, the service man made his acquaintance with his mysterious correspondent by mail shortly after he was inducted.

Sample of Letter.

He was sent an envelope bearing the letterhead "Swift & Co" and containing a typewritten note reading something like this: "Dear Mr.———, I understand you have been inducted into the armed forces and I would like to correspond with you. I am a fellow employé of Swift's, working in the Chicago office. Would you like to have a paid-up subscription to a magazine? If you have anything you'd like to talk about, or if there's anything you wish, please let me know. [signed] Jane Hathaway."

Usually They Answer.

The recipient of the friendly letter may have been employed by Swift's in any one of the company's 600-odd dairies, poultry plants, and branch houses thruout the nation. Usually he answers the correspondence gratefully, thanks her for the magazine offer and henceforth looks forward to an extra letter in the postman's bag monthly.

Who is Jane Hathaway, the indefatigable letter writer? Yesterday H. F. North, head of the industrial relations department of Swift's Chicago office, explained that Jane is five girls who formerly were employed in the Swift library.

Write to 3,800 in Services.

Now their full time job is to try to correspond with every one of the company's 3,800 men in service. Each girl signs herself Jane Hathaway and writes personal letters regularly to all the ex-Swift employés who respond to her invitation.

The project has been going on since the war began and the corps of writers recently was increased from three to five.

2 Boys Saved After Upset in Lincoln Park Lagoon

Two boys were rescued from the Lincoln park lagoon yesterday when their 17 foot canoe capsized. John Gilles, 16 years old, 448 Webster avenue, and David Haseltine, 14, of 2212 Orchard street, clung to life preservers thrown to them by Park Policeman William Justine until they were pulled from the water by Alvin Dempsey, lifeguard.

Trust Prosecutor Favors Unrestricted Output.

America's hopes of winning the war and maintaining prosperity afterward lie in a return to competitive industry and unrestricted production, Thurman W. Arnold, assistant attorney general of the United States, told the National Institute for Commercial and Trade Organization Executives yesterday in the final lecture of the 20th annual week of study.

Arnold heads the anti-trust division of the department of justice.

"This nation," he said, "needs to get rid of the idea of security economics and return to competitive industry. When the whole effort is directed toward economic security, then we get back to restricted production."

Blames Idea for Shortage.

Arnold traced the growth of the security economy idea since 1920 and expressed belief that current shortages of critical war materials are a direct result of the promotion of a security economy for large corporations and their investors.

The assistant attorney general said he believed one reason why the United States is having to fight the current war is because the nation's production system had been retarded to the point where the energies of the United States believed they could win.

Arnold said he would strike down every restriction on production and all artificial restrictions on the use of more efficient methods in production.

Arnold assailed the aluminum industry, the steel industry and the transportation industry for failure to attain needed production months ago and charged that aluminum and steel production was held down because the two industries feared a surplus and post-war competition which would upset their long enjoyed security economy.

Must Scrap Stability Fixation.

"I am an optimist about this war," he said, "because it is forcing us to produce to the fullest. We are on the verge of a new light metals and plastic age and there will be plenty of opportunity in the future for the man who 'can build a better mousetrap.'

"The opportunity for new business and new opportunity should be the greatest in the history of the nation, but it will come only if we get over the idea of stabilized process and production."

Arnold charged that the revolutionary fluorescent lighting was withheld from the market by the manufacturer because widespread use would result in smaller consumption of power and the company which held a virtual monopoly on fluorescent lighting did not want to upset the stabilized income of the power producers. He also said nylon manufacture had been restricted to maintain prices.

Arnold admitted that reduction of prices thru competition and the use of more efficient methods of production causes a temporary upset in the economy, but said the money saved on one product by the consumer soon is spent for another so that business normality is restored in a short time.

CHICAGO LEADS NATION IN ARMY FLYING CADETS

9,253 Have Enlisted Since Pearl Harbor Attack.

Revealing Chicago area army aviation enlistment figures for the first time, Maj. Floyd M. Showalter, president of the army aviation cadet examining board, said yesterday that 9,253 qualified aviation cadets have been recruited in Chicago since the attack on Pearl Harbor.

Maj. F. M. Showalter.

The figures were released by Maj. Showalter in connection with the board's current drive to enroll 20,000 flying cadets by Jan. 1.

The drive began in April, when 343 youths were enlisted. In May the total jumped to 947; in June it was 1,026; July, 1,030, and thus far 1,023 have been accepted for cadet training in August.

Average 58 Recruits Daily.

An average of 58 recruits a day are being accepted at the board's headquarters in the old postoffice building.

To attain the 20,000 figure before the end of the year, the board has stepped up its monthly quota to 3,000 enrolees.

To aid the drive for army aviation cadets, THE TRIBUNE donated 10,000 copies of the color cartoon, "Make 'Em Say Uncle," drawn by Joseph Parrish, Tribune cartoonist.

Cadets accepted in the drive will be given officers training to fit them for commissions as pilots, bombardiers, navigators, and ground crew officers, Maj. Showalter said.

Navy to Sponsor Rally.

A seven foot enlargement of Parrish's cartoon extolling the signal corps was dedicated yesterday morning by members of the signal corps in the lobby reception center at 209 West Jackson boulevard, where it will be displayed as a mural. The Tribune cartoonist was a guest at the ceremony.

In connection with the navy's campaign to obtain 2,000 flying seamen before Sept. 30, a rally will be held tomorrow night in Scott hall on the Northwestern university campus, Evanston, at which Commander Richard F. Whitehead, aviation aid to the commandant of the 9th Naval district, will speak.

The "Fly for Navy" drive ended its third week yesterday with a total of 467 aviation cadets sworn in since Aug. 1 at the Aviation Cadet Selection board in the Board of Trade building.

SELF-INFLICTED WOUND FATAL.

Oscar Drogemuller, 54 years old, a World war veteran who shot himself in his room at 4443 Sheridan road Aug. 11 because he was out of work and growing blind, died yesterday in the Bridewell hospital.

Invalid Dies After Cigar Sets His Clothing Afire

Frank Foote, 77 years old, 4643 Monroe street, died of burns yesterday in St. Anne's hospital after his infirmities prevented him from saving himself when his clothes were ignited by a lighted cigar as he sat on the porch of his home last Sunday. His wife, Mary, told police she had left him after she lighted his cigar. The cigar had fallen from his mouth and his clothes were aflame, she said, upon her return.

Congressmen Expect Call for 18-19 Year Olds.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22 (AP).—Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey's warning that selective rolls soon would be exhausted of single men led congressional circles to speculate today that the armed forces might renew their request for the drafting of youths 18 and 19 years old.

Congress now is in informal recess and any such request might well be deferred until after the November elections lest the question be made a political issue, but one well informed house member who asked that his name not be used remarked that "in my judgment, the army and navy will insist upon lowering the draft age."

"And, if our generals and admirals tell us this is essential to insure victory," he added, "I believe congress will amend the selective service act. I believe this will be done before Christmas."

Millions in 18-19 Class.

The draft ages now are 20 to 44 inclusive. Army men have estimated there are 2,500,000 to 3,250,000 youths in the 18 and 19 classification. All men between 18 and 65 already have been registered, those 18 and 19 and above 45 being included for purposes of cataloging the nation's man power.

Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson wrote the house military committee last December that "the traditional age for liability for military service in this country is 18 to 45." His communication was in connection with an army request that the draft ages be broadened from 21 to 35 to include all men between 19 and 45. Congress, instead, put the bottom age at 20.

A congressman discussing today the prospects of draft revisions mentioned that many military men contend that "victory lies between the recklessness of youth and the caution of a man."

The War Manpower commission now is working on a war service bill, principally for effective mobilization of the nations' labor resources, for war production. It was understood this would embrace a training program for youths of college age.

Meanwhile, the army announced a program to use the facilities of schools and colleges thruout the country to give voluntary preinduction training to high school and college students, to older men whose induction has been deferred because of educational deficiencies, and to occupational specialists.

The activities will be inaugurated this fall under the administration of the United States office of education, with which the army collaborated in drafting the program. The plan is designed to reduce the amount of training needed by soldiers after their induction and permit the army instructors to concentrate to a greater extent on combat and technical training.

JAKE THE BARBER FACTOR DENIES FRAUD CHARGES

Never Been in Iowa, Says Noted Speculator.

BY JAMES DOHERTY.

For the sake of his reputation, which has had its ups and downs, John [Jake the Barber] Factor talked very willingly yesterday. He did so after he surrendered at the United States marshal's office and gave bail of $15,000 on an indictment voted against him and 11 others last week in Cedar Rapids, Ia., on a charge of a million dollar mail fraud.

"I have never been in Iowa in my life, and certainly never in Cedar Rapids," Factor said. "I don't know what this is all about."

Furthermore, Factor asserted, he didn't sell anything to the Iowa folks who claim to have lost a million to some city slickers who induced them to take promises for whisky certificates which were the equivalent of cash.

Government Story Different.

That's where Factor and the government disagree. The indictment contends that Factor and the others swindled several hundred persons, mostly Iowans, by obtaining possession of warehouse receipts for whisky valued at $60 to $70 per barrell by promising to bottle the liquor and sell it for $90 to $100 per barrel. Then, the government charges, the alleged swindlers sold the warehouse receipts which had been exchanged for bottling contracts, pocketed the money, and gave their victims nothing but a few "Cover Up" dividends to hide the fraud.

Factor also has an altogether different version of the reason for his indictment.

"I wouldn't have been indicted if my name wasn't Factor and if I hadn't had a million dollars' worth of previous publicity," said the dapper little man, who a few years ago was rated as being worth at least $7,000,000, and who spent a good share of it to keep from being extradited to England as a superswindler.

Use Stocks to Wrap Parcels.

Factor's Rhodesia copper mine stock of a decade ago is still used as wrapping paper in war torn London, reports say. Of the millions he made there, Factor sent back $1,800,000 to irate investors and the British crown gave up its efforts to bring him back.

"I was born in England," Factor said yesterday, thereby settling a moot point. "I was 11½ years old when I was brought to this country by my parents. I came to Chicago at the age of 15 and I did work as a barber on the west side. I am now 49 years old.

"I was in England from 1920 to 1930. While there I met former United States Senator Otis F. Glenn, who later acted as my lawyer when I came back to Chicago to live. He represented me in the extradition proceedings and kept me from being sent back to England."

After skipping a few years, during which he was said to have made and lost several fortunes in the stock market, Factor continued:

"A few years ago I entered the liquor business under the name of the Old Oak Bottling and Distributing company. We bought whisky in barrels, bottled it, and opened four retail liquor stores in Chicago as sales outlets. But the government alcohol administration denied me a permit for the liquor stores. [The government said he couldn't be believed under oath]. So I had to sell the business.

"I paid off every creditor and took all the loss—$35,000. I sold the business to the United Bottling and Distributing company, 176 West Adams street. Maxwell Oxman, one of the men indicted with me, is connected with this company. The newspapers say he lives in Los Angeles. If so I don't know it.

Knows Bernstein Brothers.

"I know the two brothers, Henry and Leo Bernstein, who are listed among those indicted. Most of the others are unknown to me. O, yes, I do know Albert A. Slater, who owns the parking lot where I used to leave my car. That man Sloane [Edward A. Sloane], listed as living in the Webster hotel, lives in St. Paul, I think.

"I haven't had anything to do with liquor since I sold my business in 1940. What have I been doing since then? O, a little trading on the market—some grain, some stock. But trading is not what it used to be. No one can make a fortune in stocks any more. The government won't let them.

"This case against me is the result of an investigation started by the Securities Exchange commission. I was asked to appear before the SEC with my books and records six months ago and I did so. I don't know how they happened to take it out to Iowa for prosecution. As far as I know the postal inspectors weren't called in on it so I can't explain how it happens we are charged with using the mails to defraud."

Meanwhile in Cedar Rapids, it was revealed that one of the victims was Msgr. John M. Molloy, pastor of Immaculate Conception church in that city, who invested $10,000. The biggest losers were reported to have been three Florida women, a mother and two daughters, who invested $300,000.

The grand jury began its investigation Aug. 11. It summoned 80 witnesses, including Sidney E. Epstein, another Chicagoan indicted.

The indictment charges that "in order to lull investors into a false sense of security, the defendants did remit monthly and other periodic payments which were false and fraudulently held out to be proceeds of bottling and sale of whisky."

THE FARMERS CAN SHOW THE WAY.

Secretary of Agriculture Wickard in a radio address to the nation's farmers appealed to them to take the lead in the fight against inflation by voluntarily relinquishing the provision written into the price control law that no ceiling can be placed on the prices of farm products until they reach 110 per cent of parity. A year ago, when the price control bill was being drafted, Mr. Wickard supported the 110 per cent limitation. His present position is a complete change from his former attitude.

The reasons why Sec. Wickard changed his mind are readily apparent. When he argued for the 110 per cent provision, he was like everybody else representing an important group whose interests might be threatened by price control. He was willing to acquiesce to control only on the best terms he could get for the group he represented. The farmers have great voting power and Mr. Wickard knew that congress was not going to oppose him too strenuously when he insisted that the farmers be given a preferred position.

Since then the war and the rising threat of inflation have caused Mr. Wickard to review his position. He has seen farm prices on the average reach parity. That means that the farmers are getting for their products in terms of purchasing power a return equal to that which they enjoyed during the period most favorable to them in all history. If the price average is permitted to rise another 10 per cent beyond this, severe hardships will be worked upon the consumer and the danger of inflation will increase. So Mr. Wickard asks the farmers to be content with the gains they have already made.

Mr. Wickard has also reconsidered his position as spokesman for a special group. He has seen that he was not the only one to urge special treatment. The other economic groups all advanced special pleas without reference to the good of all groups together, with the result that the price control structure became something like a tent held down with pegs on one side, but flapping wildly in the wind on the other.

None of these economic groups has since been willing to relinquish any advantages obtained at the expense of the others. Union labor spokesmen, backed up by the War Labor board in its "yardstick" decision that wage advances of 15 per cent are to be generally granted from the wage levels of Jan. 1, 1941, have been avidly demanding that pay be increased, altho this, too, would have an inflationary effect. Meanwhile, the lopsided application of price control has damaged the position of other groups, the landlords in particular.

Price Administrator Leon Henderson joins Mr. Wickard in declaring that immediate limitations are necessary not only on farm prices but on wages. Since 1939 farm income has risen 75 per cent to 15 billion 100 million dollars this year, while 1942 wages and salaries of 75 billion dollars represent an increase of 70 per cent since 1939.

The income gains of agriculture and labor approximately balance. Neither group has improved its position in relation to the other. The only effect of the competition for more income is to increase the threat of inflation, for the cost of living has not caught up with the income gains, and the surplus of income can be used to bid up the prices of items becoming increasingly scarce. Mr. Henderson says that both economic groups must be prepared to sacrifice some of the additional income that can do them little good but can injure the nation as a whole.

Mr. Wickard sees the situation in which each of the favored groups jealously defends the advantages it already has and demands more as a log jam which cannot be broken until some one group is willing to assume leadership in surrendering some of its special privileges.

"Farmers want action now to win the battle against inflation," Mr. Wickard said. "They favor controls clear across the board. But action is being held up behind a log jam of unwillingness on the part of each of the great economic groups to accept controls unless at the same time controls are placed on the others. Farmers are ready to lead in breaking the log jam."

We believe that Mr. Wickard's faith in the patriotism of the farmers is well founded. We do not wholly agree with his statement that farmers or any one else favor controls clear across the board. We think that if there was intelligent understanding that the fight against inflation is indivisible, that all groups must submit to the same degree of sacrifice, the system of rigid controls would be less and less necessary.

SHIPBUILDING.

The shipbuilding picture is beginning to look brighter. In the yards of Henry Kaiser's Oregon Shipbuilding corporation at Portland a 441 foot merchant ship is to be launched 27 days after the keel was laid. There has never been a feat like that in shipbuilding history. We have come to expect something like miracles from Kaiser, but we had no reason to expect anything like this. The first Kaiser ship was built in 253 days. Less than a year after the Kaiser yards began work, the average building time had been lowered to 50 days. Now, apparently, Kaiser is going to turn out ships in less than four weeks.

Yards all over the country are producing so well for the merchant shipping program that the War Production board has just raised President Roosevelt's goal of 8 million dead weight tons this year by 10 per cent. The steel plate situation, which has been the limiting factor on the shipbuilding program, is looking up and the board now feels able to supply sufficient plates to provide for 80 or 90 ships beyond the original objective. July's world record output of 71 ships was at an annual rate of almost 9,600,000 dead weight tons.

Adm. Emory Land, chairman of the Maritime commission, said some time ago that the 1943 objective of 15 million deadweight tons would be easily exceeded, and that if plate supply held up, the production during 1943 might more nearly approximate the 23 million ton goal set by the President for both years.

We have had to come a long way to build up a merchant fleet adequate to the greatest ocean transportation task in all history. In 1937 our shipping ranked fourth in the carriage of American goods alone, fifth in speed, and eighth in the number of first class ocean going ships. We have only now undertaken to repair the neglect of the past, and, with submarine sinkings even above what had been anticipated, Lewis Douglas, who plans ship use, estimated that our needs for the year would exceed our shipping ability by 100 per cent.

The recent record of protecting our ships against submarines off the Atlantic coast and in the Caribbean has shown some improvement, but it must improve a great deal more before we can consider that we are making maximum use of our shipping potential and getting full use of the new ships coming off the ways.

SOMETHING ABOUT AN EARLY PURGE.

In the fury of an American domestic contest involving France, Great Britain, and a European war, the Federalists went sufficiently mad politically to enact the sedition law of 1798. Men's tempers were up, their public language was scandalous, and the patriots of one side were scoundrels to the other. It came to pass that for some partisans the touchstone of a man's good will and intentions was his attachment to French interests.

French agents and proselytes worked on public opinion with great freedom, insolence, and influence. The British took a diplomatic hand in the game and the country was distracted. In the excitement caused by the revelation of Talleyrand's attempt to extort a quarter million dollars from the United States the Federalists undertook to unite and tranquilize the people by coercion and repression.

If ever a country needed a united front this republic did then. Badly divided against itself, it was tossing in the wash of European war, contemptuously treated by France, Great Britain, and Spain, each with unrelinquished territorial ambitions here and each seeking to take advantage of American weaknesses. The misguided Federalists in this crisis went back to the old world for a policy.

The political idiom of the time could have made good use of words it did not contain—appeasers, Fascists, fifth columnists, subversionists, Gestapo agents, and the purge. However, the vocabulary was rich enough in its own right. The dominant party, undertaking to bring about harmony by repression, tried the purge. It passed a law against its critics, providing that any one who should write, publish or speak anything false, scandalous or malicious against congress or the President with intent to defame or "to bring them or either of them into contempt or disrepute" should be fined and jailed.

With this instrument of national unity the Federalist courts and United States marshals went to work. The marshals procured the juries. The judges determined what was scandalous and false. Matthew Lyon, Vermont congressman, spoke of President Adams as a man with a "continual grasp for power . . . an unbounded thirst for ridiculous pomp, foolish adulation, and selfish avarice." Lyon was thrown into one of his own state's very filthy jails after trial by a Supreme court justice. Anthony Haswell, editor of the Vermont Gazette, printed an advertisment of a lottery by which Lyon's friends undertook to raise money to pay his fine. Haswell was indicted for sedition because the advertisment contained the statement that Lyon was in the "oppressive hand of usurped power in a loathsome prison" and also called the United States marshal a savage. For that the sentence was two months and a fine.

Dr. Thomas Cooper, a Pennsylvania lawyer and editor, had something critical to say of the new navy and referred to Adams' interference in a court of justice. [A British seaman, a mutineer and murderer, taken in Charleston, had been turned over to the British authorities as provided in the Jay treaty.] Cooper was tried for sedition and sentenced to six months. James T. Callender accused Adams of responsibility for a French war, a large standing army, and an additional load of taxes. "This hoary headed incendiary . . . bawls to arms!" Convicted and sentenced to nine months.

Federalist judges in state courts competed with the federal judiciary in the purge of opinion and expression. Will it be regarded as strange that the process did not unite the people, reconcile their differences or strengthen the nation? Strange or not, it didn't. Some of the recalcitrants were violent and disorderly men. But the measures taken against them completed the ruin of the Federalist party, a ruin from which it never recovered. Incidentally, the sedition law produced the first seeds of secession. The Kentucky legislature, in a resolution written by Jefferson, declared the sedition act null and void in that state.

BILLETS VS. BALLOTS.

The other day we gave half an hour to a gentleman who had come from a city in a neighboring state to enlist support for a plan he had devised for speeding victory. His idea when he unfolded it was a simple one. He said that the executive management of the war effort was unsatisfactory because many of the men placed in important posts are unequal to their duties and some are giving too much of their attention to extraneous matters, such as politics. The remedy, he said, lay in a vast letter writing and petition signing campaign in which the people would inform the President that they disapproved of his appointees and wanted them replaced with better men.

The gentleman who offered that suggestion has had a college education. When we reminded him that there was to be a national election this autumn, his eyes widened in bewilderment. It obviously had not occurred to him that the people have in the election a means of registering their dissatisfaction and that an expression at the polls is far more effective than a deluge of letters. He had lived under the representative system of government all his life but from his behavior and his words it was apparent that he didn't understand its workings.

The matter is mentioned here only as an illustration of the political illiteracy of the educated classes in this country. Somebody ought to teach them that this is not a direct by mail democracy but a representative republic.

WHERE ARE THEY NOW?

Before the war Herbert Agar, the Louisville editor, was one of the most vocal of the interventionists. He was a leader in Fight for Freedom and its successor, Freedom House. Mr. Agar has just resigned his editorship to respond to a call to active duty in the navy. He holds a reserve commission as lieutenant commander and will do his bit at a press agent's desk.

At the same time it is announced that the third son of Speaker Elmer J. Schnackenberg of the Illinois house of representatives has entered service. Mr. Schnackenberg, a Republican, raised no clamor for war, but he has given three boys and they're all in fighting jobs. One earned a lieutenancy in the air force, the second is a private in an armored regiment, and the last is entering the navy, not as a press agent.

The contrast in who fought the war before the war began and who fights it now is interesting.

PEGLER ON PATTERSON

Those Chicagoans who follow Mr. Pegler's column were denied the privilege of reading his recent remarks concerning Capt. Joseph Medill Patterson. They are reprinted here by permission of the New York World-Telegram, which holds the copyright.

There is quite a campaign running against Joseph Medill Patterson, the publisher of the New York Daily News. Some congressman got up the other day and said he was a Hitlerite, and Patterson, who is no boy but a big fellow and always keeps himself in pretty good shape, replied with an editorial in which he called the congressman a liar and invited him to step outside.

For the rest, the campaign is running in a little journalistic queery published by Marshall Field, who all of a sudden, a couple of years ago, came down with a mission. The party is getting pretty rough and possibly, before it is over, we shall have a repetition of some of those picturesque journalistic and personal brawls which enlivened the issues during the War between the States.

That any one could accuse Patterson of any sympathy with the enemies of his country is just proof that somebody is losing his mental balance in the excitement of the war, because Patterson's family is strictly American from 'way back; he was a combat soldier in the other war, for which he enlisted as a buck private, and for years he kept up a monotonous din in his Monday morning editorials pointing to the menace of Japan, and always winding up with the tagline "Two Ships for One." He also carried for years, as an item of his paper's platform Decatur's line about "My country right or wrong," and he is no cheap and mouthy patrioteer who would do that for circulation and profit, but a standup American who means it.

The odd thing is that all the way down the line, from 1932 to the third term, Patterson was a thick-and-thin New Dealer himself. Long after his cousin, Bert McCormick, who runs THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, got off the New Deal and started fighting President Roosevelt's policies, Patterson supported the administration and the President personally. He showed his sincerity by going New Deal in his newspaper shop, where he encouraged the Newspaper guild, even when its leadership and policies were consistent with the Communist party line, and gave the guild an agreement amounting to a closed shop.

This burned up a lot of good newspaper people who had been with him long before the guild was thought of and who had no gripe against him and had always been able to go to him, personally, without the services of a bargaining agent for the adjustment of any trouble. After the shop went guild the personal relationship between Jomp, as they call him, and the staff underwent a change which is hard to describe. The relations didn't exactly cool off, but a happy newspaper shop became more like a factory. An old-timer who went back to the News looking for a job on the copy desk was turned down but given occasional work on the extra list because his health wasn't up to par.

"It is on account of the group insurance," he said. "The insurance company ducks a fellow who is a bad risk. It is like trying to get into West Point now."

Way back there, even before the New Deal, Patterson's editorials clamored so loudly for weapons and soldiery for this country's defense that he was accused of being a jingo. People said he was just a reckless nut who wouldn't mind kicking up a war in which a million other Americans might be killed, just so he could die in battle.

It took gumption to advocate militarism then because, as you may remember, some of the same panty-waisted he-shrews of the present war party, the poets, philosophers, and dilettantes, were sneering at patriotism, denouncing the other war as the work of J. P. Morgan and insisting that a nation with arms would surely pick a fight so as to use them, whereas an unarmed nation would shame the others into disarmament. He also advocated military training for the CCC and every once in a while he would let fly an editorial proposing additional West Points and Annapolises.

He even defended Jimmy Roosevelt's rank as a colonel of the marine corps reserve and his appointment to a job at $10,000 a year as the President's secretary. Jomp said: "Hell, the rank meant nothing and Jimmy had to have enough of it to enable him to stand alongside and give his father his arm at diplomatic functions." He said it was all right for the President to put his own boy on the pay roll because the salary was only peanuts, anyway, and a father naturally would have total confidence in his son.

As I understand it, Jomp got off the President on his prewar policy. He seems to believe Mr. Roosevelt could have kept us out of war and that he knew we were headed straight for war when, in the last campaign, he was going around saying American boys would not be sent to fight on foreign soil. But, apart from being off the President, he has been all for the war since Pearl Harbor and has been one of those clamoring recently for a second front, which would be a strange attitude for a Nazi.

Of course, he isn't a Nazi or a pro-Nazi and he is a rugged 100 per center of the purest and most vigorous American patriotism, but when such a man with such a record can be so accused you begin to look for guys under the bed and behind doors. As a matter of fact, that kind of stuff is Hitlerism, for Hitler himself wrote that the way to get an opponent was to tell a big lie about him and keep on telling it.

Editorial of the Day

FREEDOM IN CHAINS.

Some people believe or can be led to believe, that after the war our national economy can function half-planned and half-free. They see the government doing the over-all planning, private industry executing the plans.

Once government controls any part of production it will be forced to control all of it. Production quotas would have to be assigned; definitions, rulings, interpretations and clarifications issued without end; quality, quantity, and price standards set, and provision made to enforce them. The following items, taken from an issue of "Victory," the official weekly bulletin of the Office of War Information, will illustrate what we mean:

"Ceiling prices set on inedible tallows and greases . . . on six marine animal oils . . . on ferro-manganese briquettes . . . on fruit cake, by special pricing formula.

"WPB compliance branch started a check into the operations of manufacturers of men's and boys' woolen clothing . . . appropriate action will be taken in cases of violation.

"Revised specifications established for belting; hose; packing; dam and lock gate seals; hog scraper [beater] paddles; loom pickers.

"Inventory restrictions on bulk salt lifted.

"Laundries must not drop low-priced services.

"Refusal to sell used egg cases unless purchaser buys an equal number of new cases is violation of maximum price regulation No. 117.

"Manufacturers get formula for pricing paperboard.

"Committee appointed to help simplify WPB forms."

It can be seen from this list that private industry now is controled in its operations down to the last detail. This has been accepted as a wartime necessity, with very little grumbling. But don't let any one tell you a hybrid economy, regimented in some ways and free in others, is a workable peacetime scheme.

There is a snake with fangs so curved that once it bites it cannot let go, but perforce must swallow the unfortunate victim. Government control works something like that.

WATCH YOUR STEP AND SAVE YOUR LIFE.

THE year 1941 witnessed the loss of over 100,000 men, women, and children because of accidents. In addition, nearly 350,000 others were permanently disabled. Perhaps in the light of the harvest of death incident to war this is but a drop in the bucket. But it is a huge waste of life which, for the most part, could be prevented.

Students of "public safety" have viewed our toll of fatalities with considerable alarm. Apparently we must change human nature before we will be able to bring about a substantial reduction. Certainly there is room for more consideration for others—more examples of fair play. Among personal causes we may include impatience, hurry, and lack of intelligence. Despite all of our preachments there are thousands of homes and factories where stumbles and tumbles are frequent because of misplaced furniture or insufficient light.

With our youngsters, the kitchen is always a source of trouble because it is the place where "things are doing." Little hands will reach for the handles of skillets and off the stove they go, if the grasp is firm enough. Then, too, bright, shiny knives and other sharp objects are so fascinating. Cleaning solutions may arouse curiosity and a single swallow may result in complete blocking of the tube [esophagus] which leads from the mouth to the stomach.

Even in the best managed households rugs will slip and slide, while chairs, when used for stepladders, will tip. A wet and soapy bathtub is an ideal place for a fall.

Of course, highway catastrophes are with us always. Despite the admonition that the top speed for motorists shall not exceed 40 miles per hour, reckless drivers abound. Perhaps the rubber shortage will so reduce the number of automobiles that a new generation with far more caution will arise.

We could cut our traffic casualties in half if every one who operates a motor vehicle were obliged to pass a physical examination including checks on eyesight, hearing, mental alertness, and the possession of a sense of responsibility. We must recall that the man at the wheel has control of a powerful projectile which weighs a ton or more and which can be hurled along the roadway at a dizzy pace.

In this respect vision may be defective. Poor eyesight, even tho corrected with spectacles which are allowed to remain dirty, may be likened to half blindness.

Then, too, we can refuse to license those under 18 years of age. Year after year, figures have shown conclusively that the highest percentage of accidents occurs with members of the youthful group. Among those who are obliged to confront police judges there will be a generous sprinkling of repeaters. A permit withheld from each and every one who is naturally careless will save lives. Finally, regular inspection of the car, with assurance that the lights and brakes are in good order, will forestall many a mishap.

But we cannot absolve the pedestrian from all blame. He may cross the street daydreaming about something miles away instead of focusing his attention upon what is going on about him. There are unsafe walkers just as there are heedless drivers.

PUNISHING THE STOMACH.

R. C. writes: Is it harmful—and why—for a person who is overheated and perspiring to drink very cold water?

REPLY.

Never advised. Congestion of the mucous lining of the gastric pouch may be accompanied by severe cramps.

LIME PRECIPITATION.

G. R. writes: What are calcium deposits?

REPLY.

Collections of lime. The mineral is useful—in fact, we cannot get along without it. Occasionally, however, it may cause trouble—forming stones or converting arteries into pipestems.

Test Your Horse Sense
By Dr. George W. Crane

Select the answers which you consider best. The last problem counts five points. Then look for the correct answers on page 9, part 2.

1. When clover was introduced into Australia from America, it kept dying out after a year or two, but this trouble was remedied by the importation of Grasshoppers Bumblebees Chiggers Chinch Bugs.
2. Which biblical character killed one-fourth the population in his day? Samson Herod Pharaoh Cain.
3. Which one of these fish would most likely strike an artificial bait? Catfish Bluegill Bass Carp.
4. You should associate a sash weight with which one of the following? Kimono Ballet Dress Door Window.
5. It is not uncommon for great men to become so preoccupied with their own business or professional problems that they neglect their children and let the latter develop into crooks or ne'er-do-wells. Which one of these biblical characters was an example of this kind? Samuel Abraham Isaac Zebedee.
6. Our calendar year contains 365 days, plus almost an extra quarter of a day. Thus, every four years we insert an extra day into the calendar, making leap year. This makes up for the extra quarters. But for all practical purposes we consider our year as having 365 days. Moreover, we say there are always 52 weeks in the year. Workers paid by the week thus have 52 pay days. However, 52 weeks total only 364 days. What becomes of that 365th day that is supposed to be in our calendar year?

Score yourself as follows: 0-2, poor; 3-6, average; 7-8, superior; 9-10, very superior. [Note—The last question counts five points.]

EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES.

Wilmette, Ill., Aug. 17.—Your editorial yesterday on "Equality in Education" brings to mind the one great gap in public education in Illinois. That is the absence of any intelligible state policy in respect to our public schools which consistently recognizes just such points as you make. The constitution of the state lays upon the general assembly the obligation to supply all children with common school education. The state passes this responsibility over to the local community thru its school district. This tacitly indicates an assumption that the local district can and will afford to maintain equal opportunity in education. But such equality cannot and does not exist under present local responsibility.

The ratio of wealth behind each public school pupil for support of education varies on the ratio of 250 to one from the richest north shore community to the poorest downstate district. Even in Cook county this ratio is at least 10 to one from the north to the south ends of the county. Furthermore, while it has been said that only about 10 per cent of high school graduates get to college, in Cook county this percentage ranges from about 70 per cent on the north shore, to about 50 per cent on the western edge, and to around 8 or 10 per cent in the southern townships. So much for equality of opportunity when roughly 90 per cent of public school support comes from local taxation and the general assembly assumes only about 10 per cent responsibility thru state aid. But the picture does not end there.

The 1940 census shows 462,000, or 9.6 per cent, of adults above the age of 25 years as having only fourth grade literacy. The draft boards have excluded most of these. The selective service examinations showed nearly half the men to have physical defects; the leaders in physical education have notified their colleagues that there is a blueprint in Washington for drafting boys at 17 in order to give them proper body building knowledge if the schools do not change their curriculums by October.

Rodney Brandon, state director of public welfare, says that 15 per cent of our children in Illinois are of the "exceptional type," called for state expenditures for provision of special educational facilities not now generally available. He also estimates that the 97 or 98 per cent of inmates of prisons and reformatories who have not had high school or college education are educable vocationally if not academically. Federal agencies of education proved to educators during the depression and are now proving thru army, navy, marine, air corps, and industrial training, that the forces in education did not solve all their problems, even tho money may have been a great factor. The "drop-outs" from school, despite compulsory education laws, show a deadly parallel with juvenile delinquency. When the curriculum is made meaningful to parents and pupils, the "holding power" of the public schools rises sharply and significantly to combat this delinquency.

So far as I am aware, neither of the major political parties has ever looked at this serious problem factually or has drafted a party platform on public school needs. Meanwhile, Illinois is about 35th in the procession of states which recognize this responsibility thru state action.

THE TRIBUNE IS HIS FRIEND.

Chicago, Aug. 15.—I can't say that I am a Tribune reader for 83 years as Mr. Ely Smith wrote, and not even 79 years as Mr. Edward J. George wrote. I am only a Tribune reader for 36 years; that is, since I came to this country and to Chicago. But I have something over both old readers, and only a few of the million readers maybe have what I have.

I have scrapbooks of Tribune clippings for a good many years and am still adding to them.

It is not the number of years; it is how you look upon your paper, how you praise it, and how you value it. THE TRIBUNE is to me more than just a newspaper; it is my friend, too. If I'd miss it for a day I would feel as if I missed my best friend. It seems to me when I read it that friends are talking to me and I only wish I'd get acquainted with the writers and tell how I feel about them.

THE TRIBUNE is my teacher, too. Reading it, I learned to read and write and talk. In these many years I tried to read many other papers, but none appealed to me. But the main reason why I read THE TRIBUNE is because THE TRIBUNE is independent. It stands up for and defends the Constitution and the citizens of the United States. It criticizes where things have to be criticized, and it praises where praise is required. It does both without fear. THE TRIBUNE is an American paper for loyal and true Americans. THE TRIBUNE means so much to me that I go every morning to the stand and buy two TRIBUNES.

I am an American and THE TRIBUNE is for me and I am for THE TRIBUNE.

GOLF BALLS FOR CAMP CROFT.

Camp Croft, S. C., Aug. 15.—A few months ago a soldier from Camp Croft wrote a letter to "Voice of the People" mentioning the fact that some books were needed in his outfit so that the boys would have the nucleus of a library. The response was amazing. Enough books were received to form a whole library, not just a nucleus. In fact, this one letter resulted in the donation of over a thousand books from people who read your paper. There is no need to mention that the books have been genuinely appreciated.

Because of the wholehearted response accorded by the kind people of Chicago in providing a library for a battalion at Camp Croft, this letter comes to you in the hope that again thru the medium of "Voice of the People" another need at Camp Croft can be met with the same degree of enthusiasm and success. At the first part of this summer the Camp Croft special service office constructed a golf driving practice range for the use of the soldiers as a recreational facility. Since the very day it was opened this driving range has been one of the most popular recreational diversions.

However, due to the lack of practice golf balls, hundreds of soldiers have been turned away in the last two weeks and the sport is likely to be discontinued if the supply of golf balls is not immediately replenished. Several thousand usable golf balls must be acquired right away in order to forestall this eventuality. The citizens of the area around Camp Croft have contributed, and are still contributing, as many balls as possible, but that has not been enough. If some sports-minded or civic-minded group would sponsor a drive or if individuals would merely send in golf balls, I am sure our supply would soon be adequate. The cost of shipping the golf balls will be footed at Camp Croft if they will be sent C. O. D. to the Special Service Office, Athletic Officer, Building No. 13, Headquarters, Camp Croft, S. C.

PATRIOTIC STRIP TEASE.

New Castle, Ind., Aug. 11.—Why it is necessary for a Hollywood cutie to take off most of her clothing before having her picture taken will always remain one of life's little mysteries. The newspapers are giving us an increasing number of leg pictures which seem or appear [depending on whether the reader's reaction is mental or otherwise] to have some connection with that sacred instinct of self-preservation which we call patriotism. Which reminds me of a good line by your Mr. Percy Hammond in commenting on a "flag" number in the Follies in Chicago of long ago. I quote from memory: "Not since the men of the Chesapeake stripped to the waist and fought the men of the Shannon has there been so much undressing in behalf of patriotism."

DEPENDENT'S ALLOTMENT ACT.

Chicago, Aug. 14.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—1. I have heard it is not mandatory that a husband send his wife $22 of his pay.

2. If this is so do they deduct this from his pay? I heard also it is not lawful for them to deduct this amount.

3. Will the wife receive this money on Nov. 1, if her husband does not sign an allotment paper to this effect?

4. If not, who receives the money they deduct from his pay? K. G.

1. It is not mandatory as to class B relationships, but it is mandatory as to class A and the wife is in class A. We assume that you are talking about the dependent's allotment act.

2. See 1.

4. The allotment may be divided if there are other relatives. You have not given us the facts.

Beginning June 1, 1942, allowances accrue, payable after Nov. 1, 1942, for dependents [not defined] of enlisted men in active military or naval service. As to class A [wife, child, or divorced wife] the allowances are mandatory; as to class B [parent, grandchild, brother, or sister] they are terminable on request of the enlisted man. We favor the construction that altho the old definition of "dependents" is expressly repealed [section 201 b], the word is to be given a meaning and hence that a relative does not qualify for the allowance unless he is in fact dependent. The government contribution to class A dependents varies from $20 where there is only one child to $40 for a wife and child, plus $10 for each additional child; to class B dependents it varies from $5 where there is only one grandchild, brother, or sister to $25 for two parents, plus $5 for each additional class B dependent. Total government contribution to class B dependents is $50. The fact that the wording covers a contribution to the dependents rather than to the enlisted man for the dependents implies that the government's contribution will not be multiplied in cases where, for example, parents have several sons who are enlisted men, but this point is left somewhat obscure. The enlisted man's contribution is $22, plus $5 if classes A and B are both included. Provisions are made for apportionment of the payments between the dependents. "Divorced wife" is defined as one to whom alimony has been decreed and who has not remarried.

BATTLE OF SEXES STIRS TEMPEST IN PLANE PLANTS

But Executives All Agree Women Are Filling Bill.

4½ Million Predicted

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22 (AP).—Katharine F. Lenroot, chief of the labor department children's bureau, estimated today that 4½ million women would be working in war industries by the end of this year. Her office is working out a plan with other federal agencies to assure care for children of working mothers.

BY MARCIA WINN.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 22.—A controversy which might be entitled Men vs. Women, or the Battle between the Sexes, is raging up and down the west coast in the aircraft industry.

Try to find an aircraft manufacturer who will say that women are not good aircraft workers! Three wizards of aircraft production, executives of North American aircraft, Consolidated Aircraft, and Vultee, today could not sufficiently praise their women workers.

All have learned a lesson by proxy. It is a lesson in discretion, taught this week when H. Oliver West, executive vice president of Boeing Aircraft, too frankly and [he now says] facetiously said that some girls at Boeing were a "disturbing" influence and were "not serious" about their work.

Feminine Storm Arises.

In the storm of feminist protest which this precipitated, the unhappy Mr. West publicly ahemmed a few times and said he had been misinterpreted. Why, he said, within a few months 50 per cent of Boeing's workers will be women.

This undoubtedly is true. It is equally true of all the industry here, and this rather grim necessity makes a discussion of how well they work as illogical as a discussion of whether women are here to stay. Obviously, they are in the airplane factories for the duration of the war, and, obviously, airplanes cannot be built without them.

Vultee crossed its fingers in May and put 100 women to work. It now has 1,260. It eventually expects to have half the production of its tough little basic trainer, the Valiant or B-17, in women's hands.

968 Work on 2 Types.

North American began to hire women at its Inglewood plant in February. It now has 968 working on the Mustang one seater fighter and the B-25 bomber which Brig. Gen. James Doolittle used to bomb Tokio. Consolidated, which builds the Catalina and Coronado flying boats for the navy, tops them all. It has 11,000 women workers.

Women are not doing repetitive, minor assembly jobs in these plants. They are doing yeoman service. Over at North American, where the girls average $46.75 a week and lay off work with far less frequency than men, you can see them in an unusual occupation—bending lead pipes into pretzel shapes. Enough of this lead piping to install modern plumbing in a seven room house goes into B-25. Every inch of it is molded by women.

They also make the intricate power panel for the Mustang, install the hydraulic lines and electrical wires [or spaghetti] in its engine, and team up with men as a riveting duo. The theme song of the plant band, incidentally, is "Jangled Nerves."

Welders Earn Their Money.

Over in the great Vultee plant, where even the workers need a figurative compass to get out, women make an average of 86 cents an hour, but many make as high as $1.30 an hour. The latter earn every cent of this, for they weld aluminum, one of the most difficult of welding jobs, because aluminum has a high volatility and crystalizes readily in the application of heat.

It is delicate, perilous work. The worker must use the long, leaping blue flame of the gas blow torch as delicately as a watercolor brush, and the pieces being welded are intricate and vital.

Women also weld stainless steel here, an equally arduous task. One, Blanche Patton, who welded crow's nests for battleships in the World war, is the highest paid employé in the plant, man or woman.

First to Use Mechanized Line.

Vultee was the first in the aircraft industry to install a mechanized assembly line. So many little Mustangs, in such curious conditions of dress and undress, now stream steadily along its never-stilled SS line—with the tail of the final S flying the little ship off to war—that it looks like a Rube Goldberg drawing. Yet women do all the work of assembling the fuselage.

This is one of the few all-women assembly lines on a major part in any war industry. The women do it fast and they do it well, and some of them insist on working overtime. When an overhead red light glows, meaning that somewhere on the SS line some one has slowed up its movement, the women rage. They set out to find out who is the culprit.

"Some of our women, those widowed at Pearl Harbor or mothers who have lost sons in this war, would work 10,000 hours a day if they could," said Hugh Fenwick, vice president of Vultee. "We have many, many of them here."

Midget Works in Nacelle.

Elsewhere in the line they bolt the tail on with four bolts, outfit the cockpit, again team with men and even crawl into the small, conical engine nacelle, in which Vultee also has one midget working. Another long line of women works in the paint department, encased in overalls, long gloves, and mesh plastic face guards, to spray a noncorrosive dull green paint over aluminum parts. They get $80 a week for this.

Women now work in every department at Vultee except the noisy drop hammer shop, in which sheets of aluminum are twisted and molded into curves and angles by a clump-clum-clump machine. Nor do they yet operate the screaming band saw which cuts aluminum.

Executives of the North American, Vultee, and Consolidated did, however, make some slight criticism of women workers: Some are too independent in regard to safety devices; if their hair is not under a scarf, they let it fly. Some are a touch vain.

The Pro and Con of It.

"I don't think," one executive said in quaint summation, "that men are as concerned about how they look as women." Others are aggressive. "Occasionally," one vice president said, "a girl uses the talents God gave her to make headway with a foreman."

On the other hand, women have not been in the industry long. One executive said they are not lacking in ingenuity or initiative; only in training.

[This was another in a series of articles by Miss Winn, who is making a tour of war production plants thruout the nation.]

Binoculars for Navy

Chicagoans are responding to the navy's plea for binoculars, but the need still is great. Only glasses made by Bausch & Lomb or Zeiss are acceptable because of lack of repair or replacement parts for other makes. Binoculars in sizes 7x35, 6x30, 7x50, 8x40, and 8x56 are needed. The glasses may be turned over to the navy for use during the war at the navy public relations office, 333 North Michigan avenue.

ILLINOIS LEGION SHUNS STAND ON POST-WAR ISSUE

HearsBrooksPredictArmy of 10 Million—Maybe 12.

Peoria, Ill., Aug. 22 (AP).—The Illinois department of the American Legion urged vigorous prosecution of the war and full support for all the allies of the united nations today, but shied away from a postwar commitment.

In their first wartime convention, the serious minded delegates, many with sons of their own in the service, adopted a resolution condemning persons "who tend to production friction between ourselves and our allies." They urged vigorous prosecution of the war by possession and consolidation of all strategic island naval bases, but at the same time condemned "unjust criticism" of the united nations military strategy.

Table Postwar Plan.

A few moments later, however, the convention tabled without discussion a resolution urging that the axis powers be disarmed forever—"the method of enforcing same to be decided by the united nations." The resolution was presented to the delegates without recommendation by the national defense committee, headed by Omer McMackin of Salem.

Preceding committee reports, the delegates heard Sen. Wayland Brooks [R., Ill.] and Maj. Gen. Frank Parker, executive director of the Illinois state council of defense, rededicate the legion to a maximum war effort.

Sen. Brooks, in radio address, said that "the whole of civilization" was on trial in the current conflict and added that the legion's mature experience would be needed in establishing a lasting peace.

10 Million Men Needed.

The nation will need "10 million men, maybe 12" in the armed forces before the conflict is over, Brooks asserted.

"We will need 20 million in war work alone," he declared. "The war effort will tax everything America possesses in material, men, money and courage."

The delegates, urging the stepping up of their own war effort, condemned what they said was the commissioning of "younger men of no basic military training" ahead of Legionnaires in the army. They urged that Legionnaires' applications for commissions be accepted promptly.

Out in Full Force.

The legion was in town in full force despite wartime travel difficulties, and additional vistors were expected for the band, drum, and bugle corps competition and the "all out for victory" parade tomorrow.

Thomas D. Hickey of Quincy was elected grand chef de gare of Grande Voiture d'Illinois, Forty and Eight, at the 22d annual promenade of the organization, meeting in conjunction with the Legion. Jerry L. Doherty of St. Charles, retiring grand chef de gare, was named cheminot nationale.

AMERICAN LABOR PARTY NAMES N. Y. GOVERNOR CHOICE

New York, Aug. 22 (AP).—Opposed to the Democratic choice of Attorney General John J. Bennett for governor, the American Labor Party tonight nominated Dean Alfange, Greek-born lawyer-author, as its candidate for chief executive of New York.

The nomination by acclamation came after a protracted session during which it was reported the convention was "awaiting word from Washington." Mayor Fiorello La Guardia conferred with President Roosevelt at the White House today.

Entrance of a third ticket in the field was assured last Thursday when Bennett, choice of State Chairman James A. Farley, was nominated over United States Sen. James M. Mead at the Democratic state convention. Mead, described as the President's candidate, was endorsed by the American Labor Party.

Former District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey is expected to be named the Republican candiate at that party's convention at Saratoga Springs on Monday.

NEW SYMPHONY STIRS GUESTS AT RAVINIA CONCERT

Shostakovich Composition Huge in Scale.

BY EDWARD BARRY.

Dmitri Shostakovich's gigantic seventh symphony, a work conceived and in great part composed amid the turmoil of besieged Leningrad, received its first midwest performance last night as the only item of a Ravinia park concert by the Chicago Symphony orchestra under Frederick Stock's direction.

"It is to our struggle against Fascism, to our future victory, and to my native city, Leningrad, that I dedicate my symphony." This is not the only clew the composer has given as to the meaning of his music. "I wanted to create the story of our days, our life, our people," he said. The symphony is a hot blooded, shatteringly sincere effort to put the 1941 Russian epic before the world and, if possible, before posterity.

99 Players in Orchestra.

All that we had heard in advance about the new work, even the broadcast of July 19, failed to prepare us adequately for the full impact of it. Its scale is huge, and this does refer to its length [over an hour and a quarter] alone. It calls for a mammoth orchestra [99 players crowded the Ravinia stage last night]. It uses [among many other things] eight horns, six trumpets, six trombones, bass tuba, two harps, and a great battery of percussion instruments.

These huge forces Shostakovich deploys with a boldness and a vigor and a boiling passion that are often electrifying.

There is an air of spaciousness and grandeur about the whole work. The musical ideas, for the most part, are simple and bold. Their expressive power is often greatly increased by the bizarre instrumental dress in which they appear.

Opens with Joys of Peace.

The work opens with themes descriptive of the joys of peace. Then comes the symphony's most sensational feature, a musical delineation of the coming of war. A martial tune begins in a whisper and in many repetitions gradually works up to a thunderous, exalted climax and takes on an insistent, almost screaming quality. Into the intense nervous excitement thus created fall a dirge for the dead and a regretful restatement of the peace themes.

The second movement is light, melodious, and reminiscent of the careless pleasures of life. The third is a serious movement called by the composer "a hymn of life, an ode to nature." In the fourth presentiments on victory find vent in a smashing climax which suddenly, by a veritable stroke of genius, is given a solemn and tremendously moving conclusion.

The quality of the symphony is extremely uneven. The haste and the unpredecedented circumstances of its creation show in its looseness of structure and its long passages where the quality of the musical ideas is lowered and momentum lost. Shostakovich is not one of those artists who can revise and perfect in cold blood what was created in hot.

Uses Music as Weapon.

To our generation the symphony's faults are comparatively unimportant because of the smoking passion with which it treats of the events which are so strongly affecting our lives and enlisting our emotions. "My music is a weapon," says Shostakovich boldly, thus confounding those who would criticise the work because of a too close connection with immediate political and military events.

Last night's performance was an extraordinarily fine one, especially when one realizes that Dr. Stock had to master the bewildering score on short notice and communicate his findings to the orchestra in two rehearsals.

Officials Warn Scrap May Be Commandeered

The federal government may be compelled to commandeer heavy scrap metals—iron and steel—if voluntary salvage efforts are not more productive, the salvage division of the Office of Civilian Defense warned yesterday.

According to this division the shortage is so serious that the huge mills at Gary have only a 2½ weeks' supply on hand. Obsolete machinery, tools, and any other articles of iron and steel are wanted now.

"People claim they don't know how to get rid of what they can spare," said one salvage official. "They have only to call a junk dealer."

Among those on hand last night when the Chicago Symphony orchestra played the Shostakovich seventh symphony were Mrs. Jacob H. Bischof (left) and Miss Marcia Ennis.

SOCIETY ENJOYS NIGHT OF MUSIC TO AID RUSSIANS

Funds Go for Medicine for Warriors.

BY ELEANOR PAGE.

The many who are saying that they hate to see the summer come to an end had pleasant memories of the earlier part of the season brought sharply uppermost with what amounted to the revival for one night of the Ravinia festival season last night in Ravinia park. The war, however, claimed a greater share in music lovers' thoughts at last night's concert by the Chicago Symphony orchestra, for the symphony that was played, Shostakovich's seventh, directly concerns the present conflict and was written partly while the composer and other residents of Leningrad were under seige by the Nazis in 1941.

The concert was sponsored by a group of prominent Russians in Chicago as a benefit to raise money for medicine for soldiers at the long Russian front. The park was handsomely filled by about 5,000 enthusiasts, who had paid $1.50 each for general admission tickets and $5.50 for reserved seats.

The costume that most obviously showed Russian influence was worn by Mrs. George Voevodsky, American wife of the chairman of the benefit. Over a simple green crêpe dinner gown she wore a handsomely embroidered velvet coat of a soft orangy red, cut on straight hanging lines, and which looked rather well worn.

Her husband's short speech of thanks to Mrs. Louis Eckstein for donating the park, to Dr. Frederick Stock for contributing his services as conductor, and to others who participated in the success of the evening, kept waiting a large group of late comers, including Prince and Princess Nicholas Galitzine, who were active on the benefit committee, and their guests. When many others arrived, even after the concert had been in progress for half an hour or more, Dr. Stock received friendly applause when he gently chided them: "Better late than never, if ever."

Waiting with the Galitzines to enter the pavilion was Mrs. A. Watson Armour III., who is wearing her hair longer than usual this summer, and whose frock was a charming one of white printed in gay flowers. A pair of emerald and gold clips was fastened to the square neckline. Mr. and Mrs. John D. Ames, the John M. Simpsons, and Countess Sophie Kutusov also were with the Galitzines.

Sitting in a box next to the Voevodskys were the Edward L. Ryersons, the Thomas I. Underwoods, and Dr. and Mrs. Eric Oldberg.

O'DANIEL TAKES LEAD OVER EX-GOV. ALLRED IN TEXAS PRIMARIES

Dallas, Tex., Aug. 22 [Special].—Sen. W. Lee O'Daniel [D., Tex.] and James V. Allred, former governor who resigned a federal judgeship to oppose him, were engaged in a tight struggle tonight for the Democratic nomination for United States senator, equivalent to election.

Rural area returns from today's runoff primary gave a slight lead to O'Daniel over Allred. Allred's earlier lead was apparently gained in Houston, and surrounding Harris county, Allred's home, which turned in nearly a complete tabulation before other sections of the state reported.

With 184 of the state's 254 counties heard from, including 57 complete, the Texas election bureau said O'Daniel had 382,626 votes to 376,545 for Allred. This amounted to 50.4 per cent of the votes reported.

Allred campaigned on the issue that his defeat would constitute a repudiation of President Roosevelt, who indorsed his candidacy, and accused his opponent of being an isolationist.

OUR ANNUAL AUGUST SALE OF

Fur Coats

Not a single big purchase, but many small purchases from many of America's outstanding fur houses. Our buyer hand picked a few coats here, a few coats there—they're one-, two- and few-of-a-kind—day after day in the markets—until this collection was complete. The result—greater variety, greater stress on the quality in each individual coat. Many are kinds of furs practically unheard of today at this price level—others equally important because they represent choice grades. Fashion-wise, you'll see all the new advanced style details—come in and see these coats—see what an extraordinary special purchase this is!

BY EDWARD BURNS.

Bill Nicholson, inspired by a triple play with which the Cubs averted disaster in the 11th inning of their game with the Cincinnati Reds yesterday, busted his 17th homer in the home half of the 11th to give the Chicagoans a 5 to 4 victory in their eighth extra inning clash of the year with the 1940 world champions.

It was their 10th conquest of the Reds in 16 games the teams have played this year and the first Cub victory of Dick Errickson, third Chicago pitcher.

Weather Interrupts Game.

The contest, which was interrupted by the weather man for an hour and 15 minutes in the third inning was a seesaw affair in the early innings but resolved itself into a spirited, and scoreless, affair from the fourth to the finish, thanks to able pitching by Hi Bithorn and that triple play.

The triple play, second of the year in the major leagues, came, obviously, when plenty of heat was on in the 11th. Bithorn had gone out for a pinch batter in a badly gummed up Chicago 10th inning. Errickson took over at the start of the 11th and promptly pitched a double to Lonnie Frey who previously had been an easy out all day.

Bert Haas bunted toward third. Errickson captured the ball, lost time preparing to throw to third before he discovered that Frey had held second. Haas was credited with a hit on Errickson's belated throw to first a bad throw, by the way, which Phil Cavarretta barely was able to nab. Max Marshall then popped a bunt in front of the plate.

How Triple Plays Are Made.

Clyde McCullough grabbed it out of the air for out No. 1, then threw to Lenny Merullo on second to double Frey, who had gone to third. Haas had advanced almost to second and Merullo could have completed the triple play by tagging Haas. He elected the safer method of letting Cavarretta in on the kill. He threw to Phil on first and that got out the side.

Novikoff Gets Two Hits.

Lou Novikoff, who was out of the series opener Friday, was back at work, his 100th game of the season. He hit safely his first two times up and scored after each. Later he was a bust with two strikeouts, tho he did manage to reach base in the seventh on a fumble by Eddie Joost. His .400 average for the day lifted his rating for 100 games to .315.

The Reds set up the early seesaw scene by getting a run in the first inning, a run produced by six batsmen. With one out the bases were loaded on a pass to Haas and singles by Marshall and Eric Tipton. Frankie Kelleher was called out on strikes, but Fleming passed Frank McCormick, forcing Haas across the plate. Ray Lamanno forced McCormick.

The seesaw business got under way again in the Cub second. Novikoff opened with a single over second and went to third on Dom Dallessandro's line single to right field. McCullough then banged a double off the left field wall, Novikoff scoring and Dallessandro stopping at third.

Taking up where they left off last year after winning the championship of the National Football league, the Chicago Bears yesterday played their first game of the new season and defeated Camp Grant's soldier eleven, 32 to 6, at Camp Grant. Here Johnny Siegal, Bears' left end, is taking a pass at the goal line from Quarter Back Sid Luckman for the first touchdown of the game in the first quarter.

White Sox and Smith Defeat Indians, 3 to 1

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Cleveland, O., Aug. 22.—This turned out to be an afternoon set aside locally for Eddie Smith, the White Sox lefty renowned for his bum luck. The little round man, who saw a triple of his own making go to waste, and who additionally was grieved at the sight of one of his pals being deceived by the motheaten hidden ball trick, fought off everything, including the Indians, to achieve his fourth victory instead of his 20th defeat. The score of patient, plodding Smitty's achievement was 3 to 1.

Smitty could have won in a breeze if his associates hadn't gone thru another nine innings of near futility with men on bases. In seven of the nine innings they had the first batter on. In one of these innings the first pair survived against Chubby Dean, also left handed. In the ninth the first three got on against Vern Kennedy, but the outcome of all this was those three runs, one of which was scored without the aid of a hit.

Don Is Dupe and Hero.

Altho Don Kolloway was the innocent who went overboard for the hidden ball maneuver, he also turned out to be Smitty's best friend. With an accurate throw Kolloway could

BLUEBERRY PIE WINS MEADOWLAND, SETS WASHINGTON PK. TURF RECORD

BY HOWARD BARRY.

Blueberry Pie, racing over rain drenched turf, won the $7,500 Meadowland handicap yesterday at Washington Park. The apprentice rider, Jimmy Thornburg, drove him up to engage Air Master in a brisk duel in the straightaway. For 50 yards in midstretch they were side by side. Then Blueberry Pie began drawing clear and he was a length and a half ahead of his rival as he went over the line. Seven lengths farther back came Jamerica.

The field had been reduced to five starters by the withdrawal of Marriage, Reading II., and Take Wing. The crowd of 25,000 established Jamerica as the 8 to 5 favorite while Blueberry Pie was being held at a little better than 2 to 1.

Sets Course Record.

Blueberry Pie, owned by Mrs. Max Factor Jr., had been racing without a great deal of success in the east, but had come up to his best form since moving to Washington Park. In a tuneup for his stake engagement he had won an allowance event at a mile and a furlong earlier in the week.

In his victory yesterday, Blueberry Pie established a record of 2:04 1-5 for the mile and a quarter on Washington Park's new turf course, but he wasn't shooting at much because the grass strip has been in use for only three weeks.

Those who backed him collected $6.40, $3.60, and $2.40.

Air Master Early Leader.

Immediately after the start, Ralph Neves sent Air Master to the front and he led the way into the clubhouse turn with Ship Biscuit and Blueberry Pie following. Jamerica and Equitable were running fourth and fifth.

During the gallop down the stretch, Air Master maintained his advantage and was two lengths out in front as they went into the far turn. On the curve Blueberry Pie moved up beside Ship Biscuit with Equitable coming along with him. Jamerica too, improved his position and the field was well bunched as they swung into the stretch.

Air Master clung stubbornly to his advantage and for a while it seemed as tho they might not catch him. Then Blueberry Pie began wearing him down gradually. He came alongside in midstretch with Thornburg driving hard. Neves called on Air Master but the horse wasn't equal to it and in the later stages Blueberry Pie drew away gradually.

The fourth race of the afternoon was dedicated to Chinese and Russian war relief. The sum turned over to these agencies amounted to $8,102.78. The track contributed its entire share of the betting pool without deducting the $1,500 purse.

The winner was Night Lady, the 5 to 2 favorite. After racing side by side with Moot Question into the far turn in this mile gallop, Night Lady forged ahead on the curve and held her lead safe when Valdina Chief challenged in the stretch. She beat this horse by a length and a half. Suprine was third.

Defense won the secondary feature of the afternoon, the Outer Drive handicap. The six furlong dash drew five horses. Jockey F. A. Smith sent Defense to the front immediately after the break and kept him there all the way to beat Sweepida by three and a half lengths. Transfigure took third place. The winner was the favorite in the betting, returning $4.40, $3 and $2.40.

Yankee Games Today to Raise $90,000 Relief

New York, Aug. 22 (AP).—Baseball figures to make its biggest contribution to the war effort tomorrow when the world champion New York Yankees and the Washington Senators clash in a double header in Yankee stadium.

Nothing has been overlooked by President Ed Barrow of the Yankees to make this the biggest ever, and it wouldn't be surprising to see 80,000 fans pack the triple decked stands and the army and navy relief funds benefit by approximately $90,000.

Army, Navy Splits All.

Like all of the major leagues' games for the armed services, not one cent will go to private enterprises. Neither ball club will get a nickel, as the players, umpires, writers, ushers, etc., will join with the fans in planking down an admittance fee. The army and navy will split the proceeds 50-50.

Aiding once again to pack a stadium which his home run power helped to build will be 47 year old Babe Ruth, back in a Yankee uniform for the first time since 1934. He'll shoot for the right field bleachers, his favorite parking spot in the days when he was setting home run records, between games, with the great Walter Johnson doing the hurling. Billy Evans, American league umpire when Ruth and Johnson were at their peak, will be behind the plate.

Field Events Support Program.

And as if a double header and the appearance of Ruth and Johnson were not enough to pack 'em in, despite a double bill at Ebbets field between the Giants and Dodgers, there'll be several field events. Rival pitchers will match slugging abilities in a fungo hitting contest, the catchers will throw in an accuracy test, and other players will match strides in a 60 yard dash and relay race.

Managers Joe McCarthy and Bucky Harris will trot out their best pitching attractions. Ernie Bonham and Sid Hudson will meet in the first game and Veterans Red Ruffing and Buck Newsom in the second contest.

Service Relief Receives $6,755 from A. A. Benefit

Columbus, O., Aug. 22 (AP).—The army and navy emergency relief funds shared $6,755.85 as profits from the American association's ninth annual All-Star game in Kansas City July 23, League President George M. Trautman announced today.

ALL-STARS EMPHASIZE TIMING OF PASSES IN DRILL FOR BEARS

The All-Star coaches cast up their accounts for two weeks yesterday afternoon to assay the odds for victory over the Chicago Bears in Soldiers' field Friday night. Twenty-seven practice sessions have been held and today or tomorrow Bob Zuppke and his aids will give the collegians their final test by scrimmage.

Two practices were held yesterday, completing a fortnight of strenuous work. Emphasis was laid on absolute mastery of timing for the attack, in particular, the pass plays. And as has been the routine for several days, the All-Stars drilled against the Bears' famed T formation as interpreted by Burt Ingwersen, Northwestern line coach, who scouted the Bears' game yesterday with the Camp Grant soldier eleven in Rockford, Ill., along with Homer Norton of Texas A. and M.

Pro Champions Favored.

Candid opinion of the All-Stars' chances to defeat the Bears is that the champions of professional football still must be favored. The Bears have two veterans for each position from last year's squad that ran thru all opposition in the western half of the National league and then humiliated the New York Giants in the league title game in Wrigley field. The Bears have inherent advantages of experience and familiarity with their plays.

There are no weaknesses in the Bears' line and such stalwarts as Bulldog Turner at center, Joe Stydahar at tackle, and Danny Fortmann at guard, rank as greatest of all time players on the team football fans have called the best in the modern era of the game. That these men once played on All-Star elevens merely is indicative of the standard of performance the 1942 college men must meet in order to battle on even terms with the Bears.

Luckman, the General.

Then, too, the professional champions will benefit from superb generalship by Sid Luckman, whose passes complement his intelligent direction of a running attack featuring Ray Nolting, Hugh Gallarneau, and Bill Osmanski. Charley O'Rourke, star of the 1940 Boston College team, and a member of the 1941 All-Star squad, is a capable reserve quarter back for the Bears. O'Rourke, if this is possible, is a more dangerous forward passer than Luckman.

The Bears won last year, 37 to 13, which obviously means that this year's All-Star squad must be notably superior to its immediate pre-

$38,975 in Bonds

THE All-Star game's Victory Football, which has been bouncing around among various bidders, has been recovered by William and David Bresler of the Paradise Ice Cream company, who yesterday purchased $10,000 worth of war bonds at The Tribune Public Service office. The ball used by the College All-Americans and the Chicago Bears at Soldiers' field Friday night will go to the person who buys the greatest amount of bonds before noon Thursday.

The second high bid is $8,500 by Chester Glover of Park Ridge and the third is $4,100 by Thomas E. O'Neill. The Curtiss Candy company is in fourth place with $3,500. A total of $38,975 has been purchased since the competition began two weeks ago.

Camp Grant, Ill., Aug. 22.—The Chicago Bears embarked on their long 1942 football trail today in the military atmosphere of Camp Grant. The warriors, recruited from the army reception center, fought gamely while 15,000 of their buddies cheered them on, tho they knew the result was inevitable. A five touchdown barrage gave the National Football league champions a 32 to 6 triumph, which was about par for the 19 victories they scored last season.

It was their only tuneup for Friday night's engagement with the All-Americans in Soldiers' field in the ninth annual College All-Star game.

Among the 2,000 civilians in the crowd were Burt Ingwersen of Northwestern and Homer Norton of the Texas Aggies, two members of All-Star Coach Bob Zuppke's staff.

Osmanski, Gallarneau Out.

They saw the Bears start sluggishly, but gradually warm up. They saw all but two of the champions in action. These were Full Back Bill Osmanski and Right Half Back Hugh Gallarneau, each suffering from minor ailments. They saw three quarter backs, Sid Luckman, Young Bussey, and Charley O'Rourke take turns driving the pro champions to touchdowns—two on passes, one by rushing, and two on laterals.

The soldiers, who were admitted free, made a panorama of khaki grouped together on the grassy slopes of Bell bowl, a full block from the gridiron. It was on this field that athletes of another generation—during the first World war—met in competition.

Forming a fringe of color back of the soldiers were the flags of the 27 united nations. They were donated by Elmer P. Julius of the Chicago Park district. Company and battalion banners added to the colorful setting and the sun did its part after a hard rain had drenched the field an hour before game time.

Luckman to Siegal for Score.

The champions struck right after Indian Bill Geyer barged up the field for twenty-three yards after taking the kickoff on the 5 yard line. With Gary Famiglietti leading the march on off tackle smashes, they moved down the field to the 13 yard line, where Luckman pitched a pass to John Siegal who caught it on the goal line and fell over. The Bears were too anxious to pick up the extra point and the ball was snapped back

CARDINALS BEAT PITTSBURGH, 7-6; EIGHTH STRAIGHT

Winners Call on Four Pitchers.

St. Louis, Aug. 22 (AP).—Wobbly but game, the Cardinals staggered thru their eighth consecutive triumph today—a 7 to 6 affair with the Pittsburgh Pirates—but Manager Billy Southworth called on four pitchers before the final out.

At least two of the four, Johnny Beazley and Max Lanier, had been figured as probable starters against Brooklyn next week when the two clubs meet in another of those colorful crucial series. Neither hurler, however, worked long enough to be ruled out. Score:

DODGERS DEFEAT GIANTS.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Aug. 22 (AP).—In a game filled with heavy hitting and threatened fisticuffs, the Brooklyn Dodgers defeated the New York Giants, 10 to 5, today, weather bringing hostilities to an end in the first half of the eighth inning.

Kirby Higbe of the Dodgers started Bill McGee as his opponent, but both were chased early. The Dodgers, who scored in every inning except one, routed McGee in the third and continued their 16 hit attack against Bill Lohrman, Tom Sunkel, and Ace Adams.

Manager Mel Ott of the Giants blasted his 22d home run in the opening inning, but Higbe stayed until the second when a walk to Babe Young, a single by Babe Barna and a double by Harry Danning produced the second Giant run and brought in Hugh Casey with nobody out. Score:

AFTER THE BALL WAS OVER—THE FENCE!

Bill Nicholson, slugging Cubs' outfielder is congratulated as he crosses the plate on the home run which beat the Cincinnati Reds in the 11th inning, 5 to 4, in Wrigley field yesterday. The congratulators are Outfielder Lou Novikoff and the Cubs' batboy. Umpire George Barr is at the left.

Cubs Defeat Reds, 5 to 4, on Homer in 11th

Frey juggled Merullo's grounder, Dallessandro scoring. Bob Sturgeon sacrificed and Fleming fanned. Stan Hack was given an intentional pass, loading the bases, and Cavarretta struck out.

Fleming had retired Marshall and Tipton in the third and had a count of three balls and two strikes on Kelleher when the weather man called a halt. When the game was resumed Fleming threw a wide one to pass Kelleher. McCormick singled to left, Kelleher stopping at second. Lamanno singled to left, scoring Kelleher with the tying run, and when the ball got thru Novikoff, McCormick followed Kelleher across the plate, to put the Reds ahead, 3 to 2. Bithorn replaced Fleming and Damon Phillips flied out to Nicholson.

Reds Tie Game in Fourth.

The Cubs regained the lead in the third. Nicholson was hit by a pitched ball and Novikoff beat out a dribbler toward third. Dallessandro again singled to right, Nicholson scoring the run which put the Cubs ahead, 4 to 3.

The Reds tied the score in the fourth. Elmer Riddle walked and, after Frey had fanned, went to third on Haas' single to right. Marshall also singled to right, Riddle scoring the tying run and Haas taking third. Tipton then grounded into a double play, started by Sturgeon.

TWO GAMES TODAY

The Reds and Cubs are scheduled to participate in a double header in Wrigley field this afternoon. Bucky Walters and Paul Derringer have been invited to pitch for the Reds and Claude Passeau and Lon Warneke probably will go for the Cubs.

The eastern teams will start lopping into Wrigley field Tuesday. The Phils and Cubs will play a single game Tuesday, a double header Wednesday. The Dodgers will be in for single games Friday and Saturday.

Girls, Men to Open Softball Tournaments

The annual Amateur Softball association's metropolitan tournament will open tomorrow night with eight girls' major league teams and 19 men's major league teams fighting for the championships in their divisions and the right to represent metropolitan Chicago in the ASA regional tourney.

Members of the girls' league will play a round robin series during the week. If any one team goes thru the week undefeated it will automatically become the champion next Sunday night. If, however, every team is defeated at least once, the two top teams in the point standings will play a single game in Shewbridge field Monday night, Aug. 31.

The men will use a different system of elimination in their division, one defeat and out will be the rule. The Match Corporation of America men's team is the defending champion. Entrants include service teams from Great Lakes, Fort Sheridan, and the United States army recruiting office in Chicago.

John Owen, ASA commissioner, announced the pairings and the ball parks in which the games would be played are as follows:

have prevented the Indians from scoring in the fifth to offset an unearned run harvested earlier by the Sox. He scored the first run, but failed twice in his next appearances, once with two on and once with three aboard, but he belted a single in the sixth, driving home the deciding runs which had been put in position by a total of three quickly stolen bases.

Smitty's triple and the hidden ball item weren't unveiled until the ninth. Smith's drive was the opening incident, after which Kennedy walked Kolloway and Wally Moses. Myril Hoag flied to center, but too close in for Smith to break for the plate. The ball was thrown around after the catch and Kennedy acted as if he might be ready to pitch, so Kolloway strolled off second. The ball was in Manager Lou Boudreau's hands and Kolloway was a dead duck. Luke Appling also flied to center and that was the end of the balmy session.

A Run Without a Hit.

The afternoon opened with Kolloway walking and Moses surviving on Ray Mack's fumble of a schoolboy roller. Hoag furnished the customary sacrifice. Appling flied to Roy Weatherly in center, Kolloway scoring and Moses moving to third, but the inning closed without the Sox breaking into the hit column.

Two Chicagoans reached base in the third but, nevertheless, only three of them batted. This happened because Hoag rolled into a double play after Moses had led off with a single and Appling died stealing after getting a pass. In the fourth the Sox really gave opportunity the brush-off. Taft Wright opened with a single and took third on Kuhel's double. They remained at their posts while Boudreau was throwing out Leo Wells. Then Tresh was purposely passed, but Smith fanned and Kolloway hoisted to Weatherly.

Boys Run Wild.

Kuhel beat out a bunt to open the sixth and the winning two run splurge was set in motion. Wells fanned, but Kuhel offset that by stealing second. Tresh then was passed for the second time. While Smith was batting, Kuhel and Tresh worked a double steal but Smitty fouled out, leaving the matter of runs up to Kolloway. The latter made good with his single to right, Kuhel and Tresh galloping home with enough loot to carry Smith safely to the finish line.

PICK LYONS, WADE

Cleveland, O., Aug. 22.—The White Sox will share double header toil with the Indians tomorrow and then proceed to New York, the home of the Yankees. Uncle Ted Lyons will work the first of tomorrow's games, seeking his season's eleventh victory and 256th in the American league. Jake Wade, the whistling lefty, will function in the other. The Indians will start Al Smith and either Jim Bagby or Al Milnar.

Manager Jim Dykes is more than a little peeved, again, at Bill Dietrich who keeps on insisting he can pitch but mixes complaints of numerous ailments into his claims. By way of giving bespectacled Bill a chance to prove his mound skill, Dykes graciously has ordered him to be prepared to try it on the mauling Yankees in the series opener Tuesday.

RED SOX TAKE TWO FROM A'S, 11 TO 3, 11 TO 5

Boston Pounds Harris for 17 Hits.

Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 22 (AP).—Scoreless in the first six innings, the Boston Red Sox found their range suddenly today and belted the Philadelphia Athletics freely to win a double header, 11 to 3 and 11 to 5.

Jack Knott held the Red Sox to one hit in the first six innings, but in the seventh he was driven out of the box after a three hit barrage, which, with one error, netted a total of four runs. Dick Fowler replaced him and gave up nine hits. Bobby Doerr lined out a homer in the eighth with Ted Williams aboard.

BENDIX TEAM TO MEET MATCHES IN GAME TONIGHT

The Bendix Brakes, world's softball champions in the men's division, will play the Match Corporation of America men, Chicago ASA metropolitan champions tonight in Parichy stadium.

Stan Corgan.

Boasting of "Slingin" Stan Corgan, their celebrated fireball pitcher, and two men chosen on last year's All-American team, the Brakes will be making their last appearance here before defending their world title in the tournament in Detroit in mid-September. The two men elected on the all-star team are Tom McGrath, first baseman, and Ed Cieslik, third baseman.

The South Bend team has won 42 games while losing four this year, and holds a two out of three edge over the Matchmen. It will be the Match's last exhibition, for they open defense of their ASA title in the tournament tomorrow.

ANN HARDIN IS WINNER IN AAU DISTANCE SWIM

Clementon, N. J., Aug. 22 (AP).—Ann Hardin, 18 year old New Albany, Ind., star, became the first swimmer in AAU history today to win the national girls' long distance championship four successive times—but she won't swim the race again.

"That's the last time," she said after finishing the three mile grind in 1 hour, 21 minutes, and 23 seconds, two seconds over her 1941 mark, on the Clementon lake course.

Miss Hardin's closest contender was Katy Breen, Akron, O., who during the first two miles was never more than two yards behind her. Bernice Looney and Patricia Tannley, both also of Akron, finished third and fourth.

BLACK BEARS ARE BOLD, NOT BAD, IN BACK OF BLANEY'S

Treated to Free Lunch and Put On a Show.

BY BOB BECKER.

Altho the war is affecting fishermen in many ways and hunters also are expecting to feel its effects this fall, vacationists who are visiting Blaney Park in the upper peninsula of Michigan this summer have been giving three cheers because the present world-wide crisis has put no priority on black bears and [above all things] garbage! There are plenty of contented, bold bears in the woods of Blaney's 33,000 acres. A load or two of garbage taken into the woods each day serves as a popular free lunch counter for these amusing four footed animals, so almost every night they put on a free show in the spotlights of automobiles.

Unconcerned as All Get Out.

We have found no place in the middle west where black bears are so indifferent to autos, horns, running motors, and visitors' conversation as they are at Blaney, where they have been educated to enjoy luscious tidbits from the garbage and ignore people while eating their snacks.

The first night we went out to get a look at the comedians of the forest one plump old male walked within 15 feet of Bill Witt's automobile in which we were seated, lumbered thru the brilliant glare of the car's spotlight, sat down within 20 feet of us and enjoyed a snack from the garbage while we talked about him and laughed at him. Not even when we yelled "Hey, Oscar, turn around," did this well fed visitor turn his head or move an inch. We accused Witt of buying an old trained bear from a zoo and turning it out on the garbage pile.

Bears Take the Stage.

To give visitors a real show the management at Blaney now induces the bears to step up on a rough stage. It was difficult to observe the animals in the heavy grass on the ground so a platform was built. Every day this platform is covered with a choice assortment of leftovers from the kitchen. When the wonderful aroma of this mixture reaches into the woods out come the black bears for their evening snack. The other night [around 9:25 p. m.] when we watched a big male eat for about 25 minutes he capped his show by sitting down within 20 feet of us in the spotlight. He rolled his tongue around his mouth to get all the crumbs on his jowl, and then he scratched his tummy first with one paw and then another before he moved into a pile of tin cans to find a little apple sauce that might be left in a container. Last summer as high as nine bears [including one female with four cubs] could be seen in their evening act after sundown. There is no telling how many you may see on a summer evening. Occasionally a couple of the animals put on a little outdoor Golden Gloves contest by boxing and cuffing each other around in a dispute over some choice bit of garbage.

Spotting the Pins

BY C. H. BEUKEMA.

Bowling proprietors, who have been getting their houses in shape for a big year—with war workers' leagues scheduled at almost all hours of the day and night—will have their own big fling Thursday when the annual stag outing is held at Itasca Country club. Golf is scheduled for the afternoon and a dinner in the evening. . . . TURF RACING IS BLUEBERRY PIE'S DISH

Blueberry Pie, owned by Mrs. Max Factor, Jr. (No. 3) wins $7,500 Meadowland handicap on Washington Park's turf course yesterday by a length and a quarter over Air Master (No. 4). In third place, seven lengths further back was Jamerica. Blueberry Pie ran the mile and a quarter in 2:04 1-5, establishing a record for that distance on the new course. NEWS FROM ARMY AND NAVY POSTS

BY FRANK MASTRO.

Camp Grant.

MAJ. FRANK BUSH, athletic officer, is preparing one of the stiffest basketball schedules of any army post in the United States. . . . Already placed on the calendar are games with Great Lakes, Wisconsin, De Paul, Loyola, Iowa, Bradley Tech, and Illinois. . . . The new cage coach has not yet been appointed, but when he is he will have at his command seasoned college and professional players with whom he can form the nucleus of a strong squad. . . . Meanwhile, football and baseball held the spotlight during the week. . . . The Warrior gridders opened the football season yesterday at Bell bowl with a practice contest against the Chicago Bears. . . . Included in the Warriors' lineup were Stan Stasica and Mickey Anderson. . . . Stasica, native of Rockford, is a triple-threat half back, who made the all-Southern conference team last year as a sophomore at the University of South Carolina. . . . Anderson, who is a corporal in headquarters company and weighs 170 pounds, is a former 100 and 220 yard dash man on the Southern California track team. . . . In addition he played full back with the university's football squad.

The camp's baseball representatives racked up their largest run total of the season Sunday when they defeated the Peru Merchants, 27 to 5. . . . The soldiers' field day at bat included four homers, two triples, and five doubles. . . . It was their 41st victory in 53 starts. . . . The squad will be divided into two teams for games today, one delegation meeting the Clinton Bridge Works semipro club in Bell bowl and the other traveling to Elmhurst to face Elmhurst color bearers there. . . . The Station hospital, boasting one of the strongest softball teams in the middle west, captured the camp championship by winning all 13 of its league contests in decisive fashion. . . . Corp. Harold Solomon has been assigned to cover sports events under the direction of Capt. Arthur E. Mealiff, public relations officer. . . . Al Noto, former Golden Gloves and Catholic Youth organization product, who is a baker and boxing instructor at this post, has been promoted to the rank of technical sergeant of company A, 30th battalion.

Great Lakes.

FRED HOFFMAN, coach of the St. Louis Browns, was in familiar surroundings when the Browns beat this station's baseball color bearers, 8 to 6, on Constitution field on Wednesday. . . . Hoffman played third base for the Great Lakes in the last war. . . . Lieut. Mickey Cochrane's standard bearers will meet a team of Frankfort, Ind., players in Frankfort Thursday, the game climaxing the Clinton county navy relief drive. . . . A single by Ensign Wally Cruice, former Northwestern football player, plus two errors, enabled the Ensigns to win the playoff game for the Officers' softball league championship. . . . The Ensigns won the honor by beating the Districts, 1 to 0. . . . Ensign F. Edward Hay was the winning pitcher, turning in a sparkling one hit performance. . . . Roger C. Larsen, first class specialist, whose articles on swimming in burning oil and under other hazardous conditions in the official Our Navy magazine, and Lucille Stubjare, former student at St. Olaf college of Northfield, Minn., were married yesterday in Minneapolis.

Coxswain Pete Newell, former basketball player at Loyola of Los Angeles, has returned to the station after his honeymoon. . . . He and Florence O'Connell of Los Angeles were married on Aug. 3. . . . Barracks A, stroked by Coxswain Herbert Owen of Lake Forest, won the first of a series of cutter races between ship's company barracks last Tuesday when it defeated barracks C in 3 minutes 40 seconds. . . . Breaking seven pool records, Service school beat Recruit training in a swimming meet last week, 58 to 8. . . . The 1st regiment, which already has scored a long string of victories in recruit training athletic competition, added a regimental tug o' war to its list of triumphs. . . . The winners were coached by Chief Specialists George Ockstadt and Walter Walkard. . . . Bill Senters, formerly a star softball pitcher in Detroit, hurled the 4th regiment to a recruit tournament title by pitching a two hit, 2 to 0 victory over the 3d regiment.

Chanute Field.

BOXERS from Navy pier will oppose a delegation from this field in a series of bouts here next week, probably Sept. 4. . . . Tho baseball remains in the limelight and football is coming to the fore, the Planesmen basketball players are looking forward to their first game at Huntington, Ind., Nov. 13. . . . The Chanute quintet also has contests scheduled with Marquette, Iowa, Loyola of Chicago, Illinois, Illinois college, Millikin university, Camp Grant, Macomb Teachers, St. Joseph's college, Indiana Central, Charleston Teachers, Carbondale Teachers, Illinois Normal, and Evansville college. . . . The Planesmen also will oppose DePauw, Monmouth, and Wabash. . . . Last year's team conquered Illinois' Western conference champions. . . . The Green Hornets softball team was stopped in its quest for a second straight Urbana district league championship when it lost a 3 to 0 semifinal game to the Butternuts on Tuesday.

Navy Pier.

THE pier cross country team will be organized at a meeting in the Auditorium tomorrow. . . . Practice jaunts will begin Sept. 1. . . . Frank Orihel, fireman third class, who is in charge of the station's bowling, has made arrangements to accommodate 100 men each night from tomorrow to Sept. 12 for recreation and challenge matches at the Arena alleys. . . . Company Y yeomen continued their string of softball victories by scoring two decisions last week-end, the first an 11 inning, 7 to 6 thriller over the Navy Office of Procurement yeomen from the Board of Trade building, and the other a 26 to 6 conquest of company Z specialists.

Fort Sheridan.

THIS fort will be represented in the Amateur Softball association tournament which opens in Chicago tomorrow and continues thru Aug. 29. . . . Devil's Thumb Wins Juvenile Saratoga Race

Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Aug. 22 (AP).—Devil's Thumb won the Grand Union hotel stakes today and automatically became the bargain colt of the 1941 yearling sales while Myron Selznick's Can't Wait, a $37 for $2 shot, triumphed in the Saratoga handicap.

Devil's Thumb, purchased by W. E. Boeing, plane manufacturer, for $3,000 a year ago, scampered the six furlongs to $31,125. It was his fourth straight success on the Saratoga strip.

Twelve other 2 year olds were sent to the gate along with Devil's Thumb. Devil's Luck, flying the silks of Mrs. H. C. Phipp's Wheatley stables, was second. W. P. Chrysler Jr.'s Hyperionion, a $18,500 investment at the same sale at which Devil's Thumb was acquired for $3,000, was third.

Devil's Thumb Wins Going Away.

Conn McCreary, astride the winner, brought Devil's Thumb up from eighth place on the final bend, then boomed thru the stretch on the outside and won going away under 126 pounds.

Can't Wait, classified among the has-beens by the 13,969 spectators, broke first in the mile and a quarter Saratoga and never relinquished the position altho challenged by Mrs. Payne Whitney's Swing and Sway, the favorite, down the stretch.

By reaching the wire first, Can't Wait won $10,700—more than the 7 year old had picked up in his 16 races since the start of the 1941 season.

Refuses to Be Passed.

Wendell Eads hustled Can't Wait, carrying only 110 pounds, into a narrow lead at the start and it wasn't until the final turn that the pair was able to shake Tom Howell's Olympus. Swing and Sway, under 116 pounds, barged along on the outside and Eddie Arcaro brought the favorite alongside Can't Wait in the stretch but the veteran refused to be passed.

Olympus held onto third money in the race that was clocked in 2:05.

BEST 3 YEAR OLDS RUN SATURDAY IN AMERICAN DERBY

Washington Park Feature May Gross $85,000.

BY HOWARD BARRY.

The American Derby will be run next Saturday at Washington Park, with a field which will rank among the most distinguished that has competed in this event in many years. It will mark the large scale renewal of the struggle for the 3 year old supremacy with Shut Out, Alsab, Valdina Orphan, With Regards, Rounders, and others being scheduled to meet again. The event is expected to gross in the neighborhood of $85,000.

The American Derby is run at a time when the late developing 3 year olds are coming up to their best form. From this time on there sometimes is a substantial alteration in the list of top horses. Those which were at their best in the spring often begin to train off and those which took it easier in the early stages of the campaign are in condition to put over upsets.

Rounders Is Dangerous.

Rounders, for instance, wasn't a factor in the situation until late July, then he served notice that he is a dangerous horse by beating Whirlaway in the Arlington handicap. His stablemate, Valdina Orphan, still is generally regarded as the No. 1 horse of Emerson F. Woodward's racing establishment, but the presence of Rounders in the American Derby field will strengthen the Valdina chances considerably.

Aletern is another colt which has come up steadily in recent weeks. He kept improving while running in good company at Arlington Park. Then at the Homewood track he won one of the toughest races of the meeting, beating veteran older horses in the $7,500 Sheridan handicap.

In addition to the above named contenders, the field may include Kings Abbey, Equinox, Relawny, Dogpatch, Bless Me, and Miss Dogwood. The two last names are quite doubtful starters.

Once Most Important Race.

During the years between 1884, when Modesty won the first American Derby, and 1904, when Highball led the field home, this race gained recognition as the most important event on the American turf. It was run then at the old Washington Park track on Chicago's south side.

Racing was going into the doldrums in 1904, and the American Derby wasn't run again until 1916, when it was renewed at Hawthorne. It wasn't brought back again until 1926 at the new Washington Park track. After a number of interruptions since then, it has now been reestablished as one of the big money stakes of the country.

GRAND CIRCUIT OPENING TODAY IN MILWAUKEE

Milwaukee, Wis., Aug. 22 (AP).—A $2,500 American Stake race, featuring the joint holders of the new world record for two year olds, highlights the opening of four days of Grand Circuit races at the Wisconsin state fair grounds here tomorrow.

Entered in the American stakes are Rufe Parker's Adios and Doo Parshall's King's Counsel, which share the pacers' record of 2:01¼. Among others competing will be Sullivan and Mawhinney's Widow's Pride, which was second to Adios in Saratoga Springs' Fox pacing stake last Tuesday.

The $3,500 matron stake for aged trotters will be held Monday. It brings together Nibble Hanover, the champion stallion, and His Excellency. Another feature race Wednesday will be the $9,000 American stake for three year old trotters.

NEGRO TEAMS TO PLAY 2 GAMES IN COMISKEY PARK

Four Negro teams will engage in a double header in Comiskey park next Sunday afternoon, two teams of the National league meeting American league clubs. In one game the Homestead Grays, champions of the National league for five years, will play the Chicago American Giants. The other contest will be between the Philadelphia Stars and the Kansas City Monarchs.

Fourteen players who took part in the East-West All-Star game last Sunday will play. They are Satchel Paige, Hilton Smith, Ted Strong, Willard Brown, and Jim Greene of Kansas City; Alec Radcliffe, "Cool Papa" Bell, Ralph Wyatt, and Art Pennington of Chicago; Josh Gibson and Sam Bankhead of Homestead, and Pat Patterson, Barney Brown, and Jim West of Philadelphia.

SIGNPOSTS OF AUTUMN

Can you detect nature's ways of saying autumn is almost here? Bob Becker tells the signs to look for in his interesting article in today's Chicago Sunday Tribune. You will find this feature in the want ad section.

JIM CONZELMAN IS WOWING 'EM IN WAUKESHA

Cardinals' Coach Finds Paradise of Soda Pop.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Waukesha, Wis., Aug. 22.—Jimmy Conzelman, professional football's personality kid, is wowing 'em in Waukesha. The coach of the Chicago Cardinals is using the same old props up here, too, and even has found a piano to give outlet to his musical genius. Jimmy finds this a virtual paradise for soda pop addicts, such as he, because gallons of the famous Waukasha water are used daily to manufacture the delectable summer drinks. Jim also has found that the local Elks club serves elegant ale. And has discovered a place which features ham sandwiches such as he never has eaten.

The Conzelman props on the football field are becoming almost as famous as those used by Charlie Chaplin. They consist of an old pair of striped flannel pants, a short sleeved white cotton shirt, basketball shoes, and a mane of gray hair flopping down from the sides. Jim is carelessness personified.

Jimmy Jars 'Em.

The other night, the citizens of Waukesha held a welcoming banquet for Conzelman and those of his Cardinals who showed up. Jimmy rolled up several of his best speeches into one and received a five minute ovation. The press he is getting in these parts is terrific. He was the subject of a 2,000 word story in a Milwaukee paper on how to be an orator. A photographer for a picture magazine has been dogging him from New York to Chicago to Waukesha. Jim has been asked by a sports magazine to jot down a 5,000 word article on 'why George Halas is the greatest football coach in the business.

Conzelman has proved he can take it. This is his fourth season at the helm of the Cardinals, who easily qualify as the unluckiest team in the National football league. Something's always happening to their key men. Most of the stars they draft never report, for one reason or another. There was Paul Christman and Big John Kimbrough last year. This year they selected some beauties, but the army or navy got 'em first.

Vill Goldberg Play?

One of his big problems now as he whiles away the time punching out tunes in Vorhees dormitory home for girl students during the school term, is whether Marshall Goldberg will play.

"I've had a uniform made for Marshall," Business Manager Arch Wolfe told Jim today.

"That's fine," replied the coach, "If he doesn't play we can at least hang it up in the dressing room and make an occasional genuflection to it."

The Cardinals will stay at their Carroll college base until Sept. 4 when they leave for Denver and an assignment with the Western All-Stars on Sept. 6. Then they will travel to Buffalo for their league opener with the Cleveland Rams on Sept. 13.

Conzelman Works Hard.

Conzelman, the football coach, works just as hard on the field as he does playing the piano, making speeches, or drinking soda pop. The stiff pace was telling on the players so much that he gave them the afternoon off recently and took them to a nearby beach for a combination swim and picnic.

Lefty Goerke, who serves ale at the Elks' club, accompained the Cardinals. He started playing a 50 cent slot machine and there was terrific noise when he hit the jackpot. Sixty-six fifty-cent pieces cascaded out of the payoff spout. Lefty was so elated that he started tossing the coins into the water where the Cardinals were swimming. He hurled 22 of them and Conzelman called it off, fearing that some of the boys might be drowned in the scramble.

So the Cards will be about like they have been the past few seasons, undermanned, but hard working and dangerous. They almost beat the Packers twice last year. They had the Bears on the ropes on the historic afternoon of Dec. 7 and lost after being ahead into the fourth quarter.

Ray Apolskis Back.

Ray Apolskis, the lad from Marquette, is back at center, and one of the best in the league. Conzelman has hopes that Vince Banonis, center from Detroit university, and the College All-Starter, will report. He has Bud Schwenk of Washington university [St. Louis], one of the best collegiate passers last year. There is Johnny Knolla, the Chicago boy who led the nation in ground gaining as a Creighton half back two years ago. Joe Bukant, formerly of the Eagles and one time pupil of Conzelman at Washington, adds strength to the backfield.

Efforts to locate Bill Jefferson, passing half back obtained from the Lions for Johnny Hall, have been unsuccessful. Lloyd Cheatham, star blocking back from Auburn and the Cards' No. 2 choice in the college draft, will report here after the All-Star game. Steve Lach, Duke back, and No. 1 pick, may or may not play, depending upon his army status.

Al Coppage and Frank Ivy, the two sturdy ends from Oklahoma, are back. So is Bob Morrow, 230-pound full back from Illinois Wesleyan. From the same school comes Chet Wetterlund, a fast 195-pound back. Only three Cards have survived since Conzelman took over. They are Buddy Parker, veteran back, and Milt Popovich and Conway Baker, guards.

Zale-Abrams Stadium Bout Is Called Off

The scheduled 10 round bout between Tony Zale of Gary, Ind., world middleweight champion, and Georgie Abrams of Washington, D. C., in Chicago Stadium, Sept. 18, was called off yesterday. Sam Pian, manager of Zale, said Zale had been unable to get sufficient time off from his naval duties in which to condition himself. Zale, stationed at Great Lakes Naval Training station, has done no boxing since losing to Billy Conn.

A CAMP GRANT SORTIE LOSES TWO YARDS TO BEAR LINE

Stan Stasica, Camp Grant half back, gets away on what started to be a long run, but wound up as a two yard loss in the Army's battle with the Bears yesterday before 15,000 soldiers and 2,000 others in Bell bowl, Camp Grant, Ill. Stasica is closely pursued by John Siegal, Bears' left end. Camp Grant went scoreless until the fourth quarter as the Bears showed they haven't lost a bit of power since last season. The game provided the Bears' only tuneup for their Friday night engagement against the College All-Americans in Soldiers' field.

BEARS DEFEAT CAMP GRANT ELEVEN, 32 TO 6

Bussey Intercepts Pass.

Bussey intercepted Stan Stasica's pass on the Bears' 32 and came back two yards midway in the second quarter and the second touchdown was but a matter of minutes. Harry Clark raced seventeen yards around left end and Bussey passed to Bob Nowaskey for a seventeen yard gain to the warriors' 22 for the two biggest gains. After Rookie John Petty fumbled and recovered for a six yard loss, Clark picked up five. Then Bussey fired a twenty-three yard scoring pass to Ray McLean. Ray picked up the extra point by dropkicking. This ended the scoring in the first half, tho on the last play George Wilson was just over the end line, after making a spectacular leaping catch of Bussey's pass.

Adolph [Butch] Kissell, the Bears' blond 190 pound half back from Boston college, took Sgt. George Garrett's second half kickoff on the goal line, broke loose and sped down the east side line seventy yards before being thrown out of bounds. Famiglietti, who today verified predictions he is headed for a big season, crashed thru for fifteen yards, but a penalty for unnecessary roughness nullified the gain. Ray Nolting ran nineteen yards right down the middle. Kissell picked up five and the scoring play was a lateral from O'Rourke to Nolting. Lee Artoe's kick made it 20 to 0.

O'Rourke Returns Punt.

Another third period score started developing when O'Rourke returned a punt from his 13 to the Bears' 24 yard line. Then the champions spent too much time in the huddle which cost them five yards. From here they passed and drove to a touchdown. Nolting bolted thru center and cut to his right for twenty-five yards. Hampton Pool ran fourteen yards after taking a thirteen yard pass from O'Rourke. Siegal made a leaping catch of another pass and fell on the 4 yard line. Nolting went over, but the Bears were offside. Famiglietti applied his bulk and power to go over in two thrusts. This time Artoe missed the kick.

Shortly after the fourth quarter started, Luckman's fumble was recovered by Jack Bernor, former Illini, on the Soldiers' 15 yard line. A bad punt by Corp. Reino Nori, former Bear, gave the champions the ball on their opponent's 21 yard line. On the first play, Luckman lateraled to Kissell, who slanted toward the east corner of the field and scored. Luckman's kick for the extra point was low.

Soldiers Score.

The boys in khaki on the slope yelled encouragement to the Warriors as Joe Stydahar kicked off to Stasica, who came back to his own 17 yard line. After the Bears had been fined five yards for offside, Nori came tearing around to the left, broke into the clear and headed for the goal line. Wilson and Petty took up the pursuit and the latter finally felled Nori on the 1 yard line. James Cary, former Purdue player, smashed over on the first play. Nori's kick failed.

With Bussey back at quarter, the Bears tried some of their pass plays from a spread formation after Young had thrown one in the flat to Clark for seventeen yards. As the game ended, Connie Mack Berry was downed on the 1 yard line after taking a pass.

Kmetovic Proves Theory That Personnel Is Key to Blitz of T

Coach Bob Zuppke repeatedly has expressed the theory that the blitz qualities of the T formation result more from superior personnel than from any magical processes of the system.

Pete Kmetovic.

After watching Pete Kmetovic, Stanford's durable little half back, touch off his dazzling speed and eel slipperyness in the College All Star practices, Zuppke is more than ever convinced of the correctness of his opinions about the T.

Kmetovic is the third member of Stanford's 1940 dream backfield to see action in a College All Star game. Hugh Gallarneau and Norm Standlee stood out in bold relief in last year's game, and went on to add to their fame as members of the championship Bears eleven.

Frankie Albert Did Much.

Frankie Albert, who completed Stanford's 1940 Rose Bowl backfield, was prevented from joining this year's All Star squad because of his duties in the navy. It was Albert, the incomparable quarterback, whose bee-line southpaw passes and brilliant kicking did so much in launching Stanford's gridiron rennaissance the last two years.

A warrior of lesser stature than Kmetovic might have been lost in Albert's regal shadow. But the pair wrought their joint forays into one dazzling mold—Albert's passing being supplemented by Kmetovic's derring-do as a ball carrier.

Kmetovic, a native Californian, enrolled at Stanford after an outstanding high school career at nearby San José. His sophomore year found Stanford's football fortunes at ebb tide but with the arrival of Clark Shaughnessy and the T formation the following year, the Indians were again restored to the gridiron heights.

Backfield Shuffled.

Shaughnessy's reshuffling of the Indian backfield placed Kmetovic at left half, Albert at quarter, Standlee at full back and Gallarneau at right half. Operating behind a hard charging line, this quartet rode the glory road through an undefeated season and a date in the Rose Bowl against Nebraska. And thru it all was the ever present Pete Kmetovic, the "little fellow" who more than once brought the Indians out of a tight spot.

Take the Washington game, for example, when the Huskies led Stanford 10 to 0, late in the third period. Pete gathered in a 30 yard touchdown pass from Albert to launch a rally which ultimately resulted in a 20 to 10 Stanford victory. He scored Stanford's third touchdown on a 50 yard run with an intercepted pass.

Against Nebraska in the Rose Bowl he literally broke the Cornhuskers' hearts with his 43 yard touchdown traipse on a punt return for the final score in Stanford's 21 to 13 triumph.

Kmetovic is a chief petty officer at Great Lakes and after the All-Star game he will report to Coach Hinkle, where he is expected to play a prominent part in the station's football campaign this fall.

DUPONT, TEANEY MEET IN 8 ROUND BOUT TOMORROW

Joe Dupont, 1940 city Golden Gloves featherweight winner, will have a chance to step into the limelight in an eight round bout against Harry Teaney of Cleveland in Marigold Gardens tomorrow. The match is the most important in Dupont's two year professional campaign. Joe gained the chance by stopping Ramey McKnight in the third round of a recent contest in the Marigold club. It was Dupont's fourth triumph in a row, he previously having beaten Bill Parsons and Ed Carson and stopped Alvin Gomez.

Teaney will be making his first Chicago appearance since losing in 10 rounds to Tony Motisi in Chicago Stadium on May 20. Harry received $1,000 for the assignment. In his last start, Teaney lost a disputed decision to Maxie Shapiro in Cleveland June 23.

In additional contests of eight rounds, Barney Garens, Cincinnati middleweight, will meet Johnny Johnson, and Lou Woods, Detroit 160 pounder, will encounter Gib Jones. Other encounters will bring together Flash Gordon and Roosevelt Thomas and Isadore Miner and Jimmy Martin.

Pete Schu will face Ole Olson in the windup bout of a wrestling card tomorrow in White City.

SEGURA DEFEATS EVERETT TO GAIN BROOKLINE FINAL

Brookline, Mass., Aug. 22 (AP).—Francisco Segura of Ecuador gained the first important grass court final of his tennis career today when he defeated Harrison Everett of Jacksonville, Fla., 6-2, 6-0, 7-5 in the 48th Longwood bowl tournament. He will engage the top seeded Gardnar Mulloy of Miami in tomorrow's final.

Louise Brough of Beverly Hills, Cal., the favorite in the women's division, gained the final round by defeating Hope Knowles of Avon, Conn., 6-0, 6-3. Then she teamed with Margaret Osborne of San Francisco, who reached the singles final yesterday to win the women's doubles by defeating Mrs. M. M. Johnson Jr. of Boston and Mrs. Helen Pederson Rihbany of Brookline, 6-2, 6-1.

In the men's doubles semi-finals Mulloy and Dick McKee of Atlanta defeated Philadelphians Bill Vogt and Victor Seixas, 6-3, 3-6, 7-5, 6-1, and Segura and Alejo Russell of Argentina overcame George Ball of El Paso, Tex., and Dick Odoman of Seattle, 8-6, 6-3, 6-2.

Before joining McKee, the busy Mulloy and his father, R. H., successfully defended their national father-son titles by beating George W. and William Turner of Narragansett Pier, R. I., 6-3, 5-7, 6-1.

Watson Washburn and Arthur MacPherson defeated C. D. Cunningham and H. L. Bowman, 9-7, 9-7, for the national veterans' doubles title, and Mrs. Hazel Hotchkiss Wightman of Brookline, became a national veteran women's doubles co-champion for the third straight year when she and Mrs. Maurice Fremont-Smith defeated Mrs. William F. Howe of Weston and Mrs. Seth T. Crawford of Brookline, 3-6, 6-2, 7-5.

JOE HAUSER NIGHT.

Sheboygan, Wis., Aug. 22 [Special].—Joe Hauser, manager of this city's second place team in the Wisconsin State Baseball league, will be honored Monday. Oshkosh plays here. Hauser is in his sixth season.

Robinson Due Today for Bout with Motisi

Ray Robinson, New York boxer, who is being advertised as the uncrowned welterweight champion, will arrive today for a 10 round bout against Tony Motisi of the Catholic Youth organization in Comiskey park Wednesday. He will be accompanied by George Gainsborough, his trainer and co-manager, and Dickie Cramer, a lightweight stablemate.

Cramer to Meet Nichols.

Cramer is matched to meet Jackie Nichols of Gary in a six round supporting match. Another contest at this distance will involve Johnny Rozina, Milwaukee welterweight, and Bob Richardson, Cleveland. In additional 10 round events, Joe Peralta, Tamaqua, Pa., 135 pounder, is paired with Willie Joyce, and Joe Maxin, heavyweight, also of Cleveland, and Jack Marshall.

Robinson will work out in Trafton's gymnasium this afternoon, but is not scheduled to box until tomorrow. Motisi will continue workouts in CYO center gymnasium, across the loop.

Ray's Record Impressive.

Ray, former New York intercity Golden Gloves champion, whose exploits since turning professional in 1940 have been only slightly less than phenomenal, will collect 32½ per cent of the receipts for the forthcoming contest, while his stocky rival will receive 15 per cent. Mike Jacobs, New York promoter, offered Tony a $2,000 guarantee to face Robinson under his direction, but the Chicagoan believes his percentage agreement with Promoter William R. Rand will net him a larger purse.

Detroit, Mich., Aug. 22 (AP).—The Detroit Baseball company said today that 40,000 seats had been sold for tomorrow's double header between the Tigers and St. Louis Browns for army-navy emeergency relief and that a sellout crowd of 57,000 was wholly possible. The receipts from a full house would be approximately $65,000.

All-Stars Lay Emphasis on Pass Timing

decessor if it wins Friday night. Moreover, three successive victories by the New York Giants, Green Bay Packers, and the Bears prove that the professional teams have advantages in preparation as well as superlative material.

This All-Star squad which will compete in the ninth game of the series sponsored by the Chicago Tribune Charities before an all-time record crowd of 101,000, must not arbitrarily be dismissed in pregame calculations. In two weeks the college men have shown that with an even break in the luck of the game they may upset the Bears.

Zuppke and his assistants have planned an attack based on surprise, including forward and lateral passes. They have discounted the theory that any team, college or professional, ever can overpower the Bears. By widely flung thrusts, however, they may open up the Bears' line for short gains.

Juzwik, Kmetovic Are Fast.

The collegians' offense centers on dependable, adept full backs supported by better than average passing and pass reception. Jack Graf of Ohio State, Bob Sweiger of Minnesota, Bob Westfall of Michigan, and Merle Hapes of Mississippi are the line smashers who handle the ball either by direct pass with spin plays, or dash straight ahead. Bill Dudley, Virginia's open field runner; Minnesota's Bruce Smith and Oklahoma's Jack Jacobs probably will draw the passing assignments.

Then, we come to the wing backs where Steve Juzwik of Notre Dame, and Pete Kmetovic of Stanford, lead the group. They are exceptionally fast, are effective on reverse plays and always are dangerous down field on passes. When they serve as decoys, the All-Stars may pass to Henry Stanton, Arizona end; Bob Fitch and Judd Ringer of Minnesota, Holt Rast of Alabama, and Fred Meyer of Stanford.

Crimmins Best Guard.

The punting is average except for Jacobs' kicking, but if the Bears get more distance, Dudley and Smith quite likely will neutralize the advantage by return of the Bears' kicks. For once, the All-Stars can match the Bears in place kicking. Dick Erdlitz, Northwestern quarter back, and Juzwik are accurate and dependable and position of the goal posts on the goal line will be an advantage to these men who are best from 30 yards on in toward the goal.

Tackles and guards are not unusually fast, except for Bernie Crimmins of Notre Dame, who is the best all around guard in an All-Star lineup since Fortmann. But as Zuppke remarked after the opening practice, "the linemen come off their marks fast." Urban Odson of Minnesota, Alf Bauman of Northwestern, Jim Daniell of Ohio State, Clarence Herndon of Nebraska, and Al Blozis of Georgetown, lead the tackle group which may be charged with some offensive weaknesses, but which is expected to hold its own on defense.

All-Stars Have Spirit.

The All-Stars have spirit and confidence. They may not realize the power of the Bears, but they are satisfied Zuppke's attack has been capably planned. Finally, of course, there is an intangible factor which could be the most important of all pro and con reasoning.

This is Bob Zuppke's last coaching assignment. It is not all-important, perhaps, that the All-Stars win to prove again his genius in his life time profession, but each player and each coach is determined that Zuppke will mark finish to a great career with a victory. This spirit can envelop the squad so that it will not be denied its goal.

This unusual sentiment matches the other aspects of the ninth All-Star game. The record breaking crowd, the military pageantry of the contest that may be the last until the war is won, are climaxed with a $160,000 donation to Army and Navy Relief funds. More than $110,000 of this sum has come from a special drive for Army Relief. The remainder will be divided between the two service organizations.

GALE CAPTURES VALSPAR TROPHY FOR RACE WEEK

Weather Cuts Final Event to Five Miles.

Harry Nye Jr. successfully defended the Valspar trophy by winning the Sheridan Shore Yacht club's annual Star boat race week series which ended yesterday off Wilmette harbor. Altho he won the six race series by eight points over Bubbling Over, the final was captured by Glider, a Sheridan Shore Yacht club entrant. Gale, Skipper Nye's boat, flies the Chicago Yacht club burgee. He will represent the Southern Lake Michigan Star fleet in the International regatta, which will open tomorrow off Chicago harbor.

The race was postponed an hour yesterday by Race Committee Chairman Max Hayford because of weather. The fleet finished in a calm, so the course was shortened to five miles.

Carol Places Second.

Al Bingham and Charles Floyd sailed their Glider to first place in 1 hour 44 minutes and 3 seconds. Harold Elliott's Carol was second, followed by Emerson Raymond in his Dolphin. The latter will represent the Sheridan Shore club in the Star class world championship event.

J. Brennan Cleary, skipper of the New Orleans Gulf fleet, and his crew, A. J. Nugon, who will compete in the series this week, sailed the Bradbury-Kohlemainen Star boat Silver King yesterday, as a tuneup.

Cuban to Seek Title.

Commodore John T. Pirie II.'s crew was Charles De Cardenas, Havana, Cuba, the Cuban challenger for the world Star boat title. De Cardenas, an attorney, is the only foreign entrant. He has been racing in the annual international series since 1929.

Thomas O. Scripps Jr. and his crew, Morris Watson, both of San Diego [Cal.] Bay Star fleet, sailed the Mead-Lane syndicate's Skylark.

The Chicago and Columbia Yacht clubs' races were cancelled due to weather.

Wind Up Team Race Today.

Snipe class sloops of the Wilmette Yacht club and Chicago Corinthian Yacht club will race at 11 o'clock this morning off Montrose harbor in the second and final heat of the two clubs' annual team race.

Sailing yachts of all classes and all Chicagoland clubs are eligible to compete today in the Columbia Yacht club's annual lady skippers' race off Chicago harbor. Yachtswomen must sail all entries. The race starts at 2 p. m. Summaries:

AWAIT TITLE REGATTA

The Chicago lake front's first international yachting event will be sailed this week. Star boat skippers and crews are gathering here for the 19th annual world championship series of the class, which starts tomorrow.

In several respects the 1942 series is unique. For the first time since the event was inaugurated in 1923, the defending crew will not be able to race for the International Star class world's championship trophy because George Fleitz and his crew, William Severance, of the Los Angeles harbor fleet, will not compete with the 1941 winner, Wench. They are too busy with war work.

Only Bring Sails, Not Boats.

This series will be the first in which challenging owners do not bring their boats, but instead bring only the sails from their entries. All skippers will draw for boats daily, and local Star boats will be provided the competitors. Sufficient boats will be made available by the Chicago Star yachtsmen so that no skipper and crew will race the same boat twice.

In each race the skippers will carry their own sails aboard the boat they have selected, so that they may be identified. As all Star boats are built to exactly the same specifications—in fact, from a master blueprint—the best way to tell them apart is by the numbers carried on their mainsails. Altho most of the 22 foot, 8¾ inch long sloops of the class are painted white, some are painted distinguishing colors according to owners' whims.

All Stars have just 281 square feet in their main and jib sails, step a 31 foot, 9 inch mast, and carry a heavy metal keel weighing between 880 and 900 pounds.

Star Boats All Alike.

The Star boats' popularity—2,152 of them have been built since the first one in 1911—is attributed to the fact that they are all alike. Being standardized, no skipper can have a longer boat, nor one with more canvas, leaving competition to superior skill in sailing.

The first championships were held on Long Island Sound, N. Y., in 1923. That same year the Sheridan Shore Yacht club of Wilmette, Ill., was given a charter for a fleet of Star boats, the first on Lake Michigan. Until recently, the club had more Stars in its fleet than any of the other 130 fleets thruout the world.

Emerson Raymond will represent the Wilmette fleet, having won the fleet elimination races a month ago. His brother, Maurice, will crew for him. Skipper Raymond has raced Stars at Sheridan Shore since 1933, but Maurice has been sailing less than a year. They won the trials in Skipper Raymond's Dolphin Star boat No. 1921.

In 1939, Skipper Raymond won the club season championship, but the last two seasons he has placed second.

REACHING ACROSS STARTING LINE

Shots of the Week

Steve Kovach's 2 iron deuce at No. 17, and Mike Stolarik's driver second at No. 18 in Chicago Amateur.

Round of the Week

Frank Kovack's 32—35—67 to tie Knollwood course record in Chicago Amateur quarter-finals.

Manuel de la Torre Breaks Up Match Between Good Friends.

DIVOTS from five days of the Chicago National Amateur at Knollwood: It was a refreshing testimonial to the democracy of golf to watch three former caddies—Steve Kovach, Frank Kovack, and Mike Stolarik—reach the semi-finals. . . . This was especially true of Kovack who caddied at Knollwood for seven years and tied the course record of 67 in Wednesday's quarter-finals. . . . The promise shown by Stolarik in the All-American amateur was convincingly borne out by his work in the quarter-final victory over Defending Champion Billows and his 38 hole match against Wehrle in the semi-finals. . . . It will be a long time before local fans see anything like those four consecutive birdies the little sailor hurled at Wilf to square the match. . . . Kovack was the wit of the week. . . . After his defeat by Kovach in the semi-finals, Frank went around asking people to kick him. . . . Asked about Stolarik's use of a driver off the 18th fairway, both against Wehrle and Billows, Kovack said, "That's nothing. . . . We use a driver for that shot all the time.

The Locker Room feels a special prize should have been awarded to Lou Esposito, the railway clerk who carried Wehrle 17 holes in the quarter-finals. . . . Lou worked from midnight until 8 a. m. that day. . . . He scored a birdie on the second extra hole to eliminate Bill Ludolph of Aurora, who himself had put out John Holmstrom in the second round. . . . Then he took a shower and went out and gave Wehrle quite a scare. . . Few champions this season have been subjected to such opposition as Wehrle got from Ray Bowen of Park Ridge, Esposito, Stolarik, and, last but not least, Kovach. . . . The little Pittsburgh steel worker had reserved last week for his vacation in order to make the trip here. . . . A number of Steve's fellow workers have agreed to finance the household expenses of Steve's wife and child if he cares to turn pro and make the winter circuit, [if any] next season.

Manuel de la Torre broke up, in one tournament day, what would have been a right interesting match between two good friends—Don Armstrong of Aurora and Clayton Unger of Naperville. . . . Both lost to the Wildcat star in succession. . . . Bob Emery of Big Foot and John Walters of Kildeer were the most faithful attendants of the CDGA official set. . . . Knollwood's greens received special praise, thanks to the care given them by Joe Bertucci. . . . Twelve years ago Manager Ed Newhart asked Joe, then employed at Old Elm, to drop over and fix the No. 2 fairway. . . . He did such a good job that Ed hired him and never has regretted it.

Golfers at Tam o' Shanter are talking about the new asphalt circle areas around all of the ball washers. . . . Eighty tons of asphalt are being laid over crushed stone to improve walks, bridge approaches, and bench areas near all tees. . . . W. J. Bell, 62 year old Devon Links instructor, recently shot one of the lowest rounds ever submitted at Mohawk. . . . The veteran, who played his first golf in 1898, came in with a 68, five under par. . . . Mr. Bell played his first competitive match against Walter Hagen. . . . The Northwestern University club of Chicago will hold its annual golf tournament at Tam o' Shanter on Sept. 24. . . . James L. O'Keefe is president of the club and A. L. Schwartz is chairman of the golf event. . . . Butterfield's program today will be headed by a parent and junior tournament. . . . The committee in charge includes Mrs. C. J. Bansbach, chairman; Mrs. Lawrence J. McCarthy, Mrs. Arthur F. McCormick, and Mrs. Rock Moran.

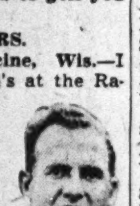
More than 75 leading steel men in this area will be guests of the General Steel Warehouse company today at Nordic Hills. . . . President L. B. Kidwell has arranged an 18 hole handicap event. . . . Among the favorites are Ken Hunt, Ernie Harwell, Bill Thueson, and Frank Golick. . . . Ridgemoor, scene of the Hale America Open last June, will conduct its Jabberwalk tournament on Wednesday. . . . C. H. [Andy] Anderson was the winner of the $25 prize offered by Pvt. Ray Ficht of Camp Claiborne, La., to the first Itasca member making an ace before Ray's birthday, Aug. 28. . . . Andy holed out at the 17th during the club's Salt Creek day. He suggested a $25 war bond for his two year old daughter, and asked that the remaining $6.25 be forwarded to the service center fund at Camp Claiborne.

The Inquiring Golfer

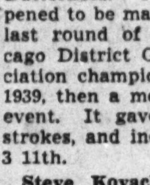
THE QUESTION.

What is the best round of golf you ever played?

THE ANSWERS.

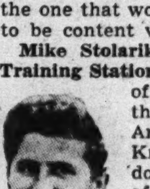


Wilford Wehrle, Racine, Wis.—I have had a couple of 64's at the Racine Country club, but think the best round I ever played was a 65 at Butterfield. That happened to be made in the last round of the Chicago District Golf association championship of 1939, then a medal play event. It gave me the title by 13 strokes, and included a 5 on the par 3 11th.

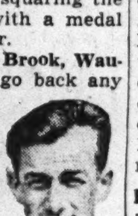


Steve Kovach, Pittsburgh, Pa.—I hold the course record of 67 at the Pittsburgh Field club, where Byron Nelson and Paul Runyan had shot 68's, but the one I like is a 61 at the Breckenridge Heights course at home. It's a nine hole layout measuring only 3,000 yards, but I managed to get around it in 30—31—61, nine shots under the course par of 35—35—70 last year.

Thomas G. McMahon, Skokie—A few few years after the 1922 National Open tournament won by Gene Sarazen at Skokie, I went out and played a Saturday round there. The course record was 70, two under par, set by Bobby Jones during the Open. I came to the 18th and found myself with a 25 foot putt for a 68. I rolled up to two feet, but that was the one that wouldn't drop and I had to be content with a tying 70.



Mike Stolarik, Great Lakes Naval Training Station—I'll always be proud of a round I played in this Chicago National Amateur tournament at Knollwood. I was three down to Wilford Wehrle after 30 holes of our semi-final match, and things started to happen. I got four birdies in a row, the first three squaring the match, and I finished with a medal score of 72, one under par.



Frank Kovack, Bonnie Brook, Waukegan—I don't have to go back any farther than last Wednesday afternoon, when I played Manuel de la Torre in the quarter-finals of the Chicago Amateur tournament. I caddied at Knollwood for seven years, and it was a pleasure to be able to come home with a 32—35—67, six under par, to tie the course record. The round included seven birdies and an eagle at the 480 yard sixth.

ILLINOIS and Wisconsin golfers, professional and amateur, will renew tomorrow what the Locker Room considers the best interstate rivalry in the game. . . . Twenty-five Illinois section PGA members, led by President Alex Cunningham of North Shore, will invade the Racine Country club, home port of Matt Jans, president of the Wisconsin section. . . . The main prize for the professionals will be the R. W. [Doc] Treacy Memorial trophy, named for the late Wisconsin pro who was one of the greatest secretaries in National PGA history. . . . Coincident with the pro match will be a battle between 10 Badger amateur players against as many Illini. . . . This is the sort of competition the late Joe G. Davis, longtime golf editor of THE TRIBUNE and for many years secretary of the Chicago District Golf association, worked to make successful. . . . In one of the pro matches Francis and Len Gallett of Milwaukee will be paired against Tommy Armour and Harry Adams of Medinah. . . . Another will send Eddie Gayer of Twin Orchard and Charley Penna of Medinah against Butch Krueger of Beloit and Phil Greenwald of Milwaukee. . . . Dick Metz of Oak Park and Johnny Revolta of Evanston will draw two Henrys, Gardner and Kaiser, as their Wisconsin pros.

Racine's Favorite Native Sons Head Amateur Entry List.

Wisconsin's amateur tensome will be headed by Racine's leading native son golfers—Wilford Wehrle, Friday's victor in the Chicago National Amateur final, and Ray Billows of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., who won the 1941 title when it was called the Great Lakes Amateur. . . . Other Badger swingers include Lyn Lardner of Oconomowoc, Billy Sixty and Bill Miller of Milwaukee; Mike Bencriscutto, Bo Melik, and Bob Ruston of Racine; John Hayes of Appleton, and Bud Ripple of Watertown. . . . The Chicago district will call upon a field composed of Don Armstrong of Aurora, John Lehman of Olympia Fields, Hank Bowbeer of Riverside, Manuel de la Torre of Northwestern, Pick Wagner of Kildeer, Clayton Unger of Naperville, Art Doering of Bob o' Link, Gus Novotny, Jack Duers, and Ed Sawyer of Park Ridge, John Holmstrom and Bob Rosecrance of Rockford, and Bill Ludolph of Aurora. . . . All in all, it will be a busy two days at the Racine club, for this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock Wehrle and Billows will tee off against Butch Krueger and Jim Milward of Madison in a special war relief match.

The Bowling Proprietors of Greater Chicago have chosen Thursday and Itasca for their annual golf outing. . . . Friday will witness a one-day CDGA handicap event at Flossmoor. . . . Thomas Eastman, 4477 Elston avenue, won the closest-shot-to-the-pin contest at Mohawk. . . . MAUST AND VOGEL BREAK 100S IN VANDALIA TUNEUP

Vandalia, O., Aug. 22 (AP).—Karl Maust of Columbus, 1941 National Open trapshoot champion, and John Vogel of Alliance, Neb., each shattered 100 straight targets in the second day of preliminary firing in the 43d annual Grand American Trapshooting tournament today.

Homer Clark of East Alton, Ill., also had a perfect 100 score in the 16 yard singles event to lead professional shooters.

Maust and Cal Ray of Coquille, Ore., tied for first in the doubles, each getting 48 out of 50. E. R. Lutz of Knoxville, Tenn., president of the Amateur Trapshooting association, sponsor of the Grand American, headed the marksmen scoring 99. E. B. Chamberlain of Martville, N. Y., broke 99 in succession then missed the final target. Other 99 scorers were Hale Jones of Wood River, Ill., and W. T. Jonas of Lexington, Ky.

Preliminary firing continues tomorrow. The championship events for $10,000 in prize money open Monday and continue thru Friday.

HIGH TAX RATE THREATENS END OF MANY FIRMS

Predict Structure Will Be Revised.

BY THOMAS FURLONG.

By fixing the normal corporation income tax rate at 45 per cent, the house of representatives is hastening the day when the federal government will be forced to revise its entire corporation tax system, in the opinion of tax authorities.

The 45 per cent rate, or even the 40 per cent rate that may be substituted in the revenue bill by the senate, means the death of many business enterprises, competent tax men agree.

Unlike the excess profits tax, the normal tax hits hardest those enterprises which are already harassed by the numerous restrictions of a wartime economy. A civilian industry with its business already severely curtailed will be forced to give up nearly half of its net income regardless of the relationship of this year's profits to normal earnings.

Would Drain Off 90 Per Cent.

In combination with the excess profits tax, some corporations would pay to the federal government this year as much as 90 per cent of their net earnings, altho these earnings may be small by comparison with former years.

The principle of the excess profits tax, most tax men agree, is fair. A corporation could pay out all of its "excess" profits without jeopardizing its future if it were permitted to retain a fair percentage of its normal earnings. But when an excessively high normal tax is levied in combination with a stiff excess profits tax the result may be disastrous. Furthermore, it is explained, the normal tax alone severely penalizes many corporations because it is levied without regard to the customary test of ability to pay.

A Hypothetical Case.

An example illustrates the effect of a high normal tax rate on a corporation beset with many wartime difficulties. The X company in 1939 had a profit before taxes of a million dollars. At the then existing rate it paid a normal federal income tax of $180,000. The company, unable to convert to war output, will be lucky this year to earn 20 per cent of its 1939 return.

Altho already severely penalized, it would pay under the proposed revenue bill nearly half of its reduced profits as taxes. The theory of wartime taxes is to drain off first the excess profits that are created directly by war activity or wartime inflation of prices and then distribute the remaining tax burden according to ability to pay. But a corporation whose normal profits have been reduced 80 per cent by wartime dislocations gives up under the terms of the pending tax bill nearly half of the meager profits that remain.

Differs from Other Taxes.

Tax authorities assert that under the pressure to raise revenues for the war, sight is being lost of the fact that the corporation income tax differs from other income taxes levied by the federal government.

Business enterprises, tax men explain, are not the final recipients of profits earned in the business. A tax on the earnings of a corporation is levied arbitrarily without regard to the ability of individual stockholders to pay. All stockholders pay at the same rate.

The tax reaches the stockholders indirectly. Persons with incomes too small to be reached by the individual income tax pay a relatively high tax on dividends received from a corporation. This occurs under the present tax system even if the income of the individual receiving dividends is not enough to maintain bare subsistence.

Important Revenue Source.

Altho it conflicts with the declared federal policy levying taxes according to the ability to pay, the corporation income tax has grown steadily in importance as a source of revenue for the government. There are a number of reasons for this development, tax men assert. The tax is collected with comparative ease. There are relatively few corporations and the tax paid on the average return is large compared with the individual income tax.

The first corporate income tax, described as an "excise" tax for legal reasons, was enacted in 1909. The rate was 1 per cent of net income and remained at that level until 1916. The tax had reached a peak of 10 per cent in 1919. In addition excess profits taxes were levied in the war period.

In the 1920s and early 1930s the corporation tax rates ranged from 12½ to 13¾ per cent. The maximum rate reached 16½ per cent with the adoption of the 1938 revenue act to which was added an undistributed earnings tax, later repealed. The first revenue act of 1940 fixed the maximum normal rate on corporations at 21 per cent.

Would Triple Decade Ago.

The present effective rate of 31 per cent [normal and surtax] has been in effect only one year. The pending revenue bill, fixing the effective rate on normal profits at 45 per cent, would mean a rate more than three times that existing a decade ago.

As the consequences of such a high rate become apparent to congress and the public, a complete overhauling of the tax system will result, tax men predict. The senate finance committee has made plain that it believes that corporation taxes have reached a level that will be difficult to sustain.

2 Middle West Held Utilities' Earnings Drop

The Central & South West Utilities and the North West Utilities companies, controlled by the Middle West corporation, reported lower profits yesterday for the quarter ended June 30 compared with a year ago. The decrease was caused by higher tax charges. Half-year earnings of Central & South West also slumped, while North West reported a slight gain.

Central & South West, whose subsidiaries serve 719 communities, realized a quarterly profit of $444,469, against $597,314 a year ago. Half-year income figures were $1,000,896 and $1,156,394, respectively.

Arrearages Balk Dividends.

The company reported its income for the six month periods in 1942 and 1941 included $285,000 and $275,000, respectively, which could not be distributed as dividends because of arrearages on preferred stock of certain subsidiaries.

Net quarterly income of North West Utilities dwindled to $97,195 from $126,667 a year ago. The utility, operating subsidiaries in Wisconsin, Michigan, South Dakota and Nebraska, earned $266,031 in the first half of 1942. A year ago half year income was $250,211.

U. S. BROACHES PLAN TO EXPLOIT RUBBER TRACTS IN COLOMBIA

BOGOTA, Colombia, Aug. 22 (AP).—A plan for the opening of millions of square miles of virgin rubber tracts in eastern Colombia has been put forward by the United States government's Rubber Reserve corporation, it was learned today.

Corporation officials are discussing with the government and Avianca air lines the construction of landing fields in the jungles to take out the rubber.

The territory which would be opened for exploitation is roughly bounded by the Rio Meta, the Rio Putumayo, the Brazilian boundary and the eastern Cordillera de los Andes. This vast triangle covers almost half of Colombia.

A preliminary survey disclosed the great jungle area has untold quantities of rubber but exploitation has been retarded by absence of transportation which is limited chiefly to rivers. With rubber stations scattered thruout the jungles it is believed the contractors could begin gathering great quantities of rubber from the natives.

NOTED 1893 WORLD'S FAIR LOCOMOTIVE IS SENT TO SCRAP HEAP

the locomotive, which was put in the company's historical collection in 1924.

Named in honor of the director general of the world's fair, the "Director General" was one of the first of the famous "Vauclain compounds," built by the Baldwin Locomotive company for the road in 1893.

After the fair, it was put on a high speed passenger run between Washington and New York and at times it ran an average speed of 92.5 miles an hour.

Revised Plan on Income Tax Is Submitted

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22 (AP).—Treasury men today suggested modifications in the house-approved withholding tax on individual incomes but a senate finance subcommittee reserved decision on the plan.

The house voted to begin next Jan. 1 withholding at the source 5 per cent of all wages and salaries [after allowance for exemptions and dependents] and 5 per cent of dividends from securities and bond interest. On Jan. 1, 1944, the rate would go up to 10 per cent. The money collected would be applied against income taxes for the current year, with adjustments to be made at the end of the year.

Treasury officials made these recommendations:

1. Exclude bond coupons from the levy, because of collection difficulties.
2. Allow employers 30 days in which to give employes receipts for the tax withheld, and an equal length of time in which to report changes in marital or dependency status of employés.
3. Exempt casual workers and those drawing less than $11 a week.
4. Establish a bracket system, with salaries falling into the same $5 or $10 a week range subject to a uniform levy. This was intended to relieve employers of the necessity of calculating the tax down to the penny on each individual salary.

WARD BAKING CO. PLANS DIVIDEND BY WRITE DOWN

New York, Aug. 22 (AP).—The Ward Baking company announced today it planned a write-down of assets to modernize its accounting practices and to permit the early payment of a dividend on the preferred stock.

The par value of the 7 per cent preferred stock would be reduced to $50 a share from $100, and property and plant account would be written down by $2,928,036. Good will, copyrights, and trade-marks would be written down to $1 from $7,595,000.

It was the intention of the directors, the company said, to declare a 50 cent dividend on the preferred stock as soon as stockholders approved the recapitalization plan.

Tank Arsenal Construction at Standstill

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Construction work on a Detroit tank arsenal remained at a standstill yesterday after a walkout of 475 AFL workers protesting employment of CIO sheet metal men, but production moved back toward normal at the Vernon plant of the Aluminum Corporation of America and threats of work stoppages at two other plants were removed.

Three thousand workers walked out of the Vernon aluminum plant in Los Angeles Friday in what leaders of the CIO United Automobile Workers of America termed an unauthorized work stoppage, but returned at the urging of union leaders.

William B. Taylor, west coast director of the union's aviation division, said the cause of the walkout was the alleged dismissal of 30 skilled craftsmen, but M. M. Anderson, Alcoa personnel director, said no one had been discharged and that the dispute involved one worker who quit and then changed his mind.

Threat to Shipyard Lifted.

A threatened tieup at the Henry J. Kaiser shipyards in Richmond, Cal., was removed when members of the AFL boilermakers' local voted to ask government aid in settling a jurisdictional dispute with another AFL union.

A CIO strike called for tomorrow at General Motors corporation's Harrison radiator division in Lockport, N. Y., was indefinitely postponed upon notification that the case would be certified to the War Labor board. The union seeks a 10 cent hourly wage increase above the present 75 cent minimum and the company offered a 5 cent raise.

Production of tanks in the main plant of the Chrysler corporation tank arsenal at Detroit proceeded as usual but E. J. Hunt, operating manager, said that the walkout of construction workers "definitely holds up our future production schedule." The dispute was before an agency of the War Production board.

Ask Truckers to Return.

The WLB meanwhile appealed to striking midwestern truckers to return to work. The WLB said that the dispute, which involves some 96 companies and approximately 10,000 workers, was contrary to the national agreement of labor unions not to strike during the war. The strike is in connection with the date when certain wage rates are to be made retroactive.

Delegates to a CIO Aluminum Workers of America conference at Pittsburgh returned to their jobs in seven big Alcoa plants primed to urge the locals to reject the WLB's decision denying them a general wage increase. President Nick A. Zonerich said he would be empowered to call a strike in the event the rejection is approved by the locals.

He said, however, that first he would appeal directly to the President, asking an audience for himself and a representative of each local.

SPECULATION IN FARM LAND SLIGHT; PRICES DIP IN MOST STATES

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22 (AP).—Speculators generally adopted a hands off attitude in the buying and selling of farm land during the four months from March 1 to July 1 of this year, leaving most of the transfers up to the farmers themselves, the agriculture department reported today.

The department said that land values and volume of transfers leveled off during the period, in contrast to the substantial increases in both brackets during the year ended March 1. Even then, the report said, more than 60 per cent of the buyers were farmers, and about half of them tenants. Little speculative activity was involved.

FORESEE PLENTY CHICAGO POWER UNTIL LATE 1943

Ban on Two Projects Is Expected.

Action of the War Production board halting two power expansion projects of the Commonwealth Edison company is not expected to hasten curtailment in the civilian use of electricity in the Chicago area, officials said yesterday.

Recalling a previous announcement that probable curtailment would not become necessary until late in 1943, a company spokesman reiterated this prediction and said it needed no revision at this time.

The WPB Friday halted or suspended work on 85 public and private power projects in revamping its wartime power expansion program. The board said the move "substantially enhanced the probability of widespread curtailment" in civilian use of power.

Affects Noncritical Uses.

Demands of the war program, the board reported, also would inevitably affect so-called luxury uses of power. Edison officials said they construed this to cover sign and window lighting, air conditioning systems, and other noncritical uses.

The Edison company projects suspended by the WPB order are installation of a 150,000 kilowatt unit at the Fisk station in Chicago and a 50,000 kilowatt unit at Dixon, Ill. The Dixon plant is operated by Edison's subsidiary, the Illinois Northern Utilities company.

The projects were planned as part of Edison's 120 million dollar expansion program to add 350,000 kilowatts to its present generating capacity of 2,145,000 and eventually fill demands of what is calculated would be the "full war load" in this section.

The maximum demand was not expected until sometime before the end of the summer of 1943. None of the projects mapped under the company's expansion program was to have been completed until after that time, officials said.

Cancellation Is Expected.

Officials said the projects were still in the "blue print" stage and awaiting priorities ratings. The company, they said, anticipated cancellation of the project on the basis of information that equipment manufacturers were pushing war orders considered more vital.

Projects of the Produce Terminal corporation, Chicago, and the village of Hinsdale also were affected by the WPB order.

The Produce Terminal corporation, which is building an addition to its plant at 39th and Morgan streets, announced it had received no official notice of the restrictions imposed by the board and therefore did not know the exact status of the project. The addition is 95 per cent completed.

R. A. Peet, village clerk of Hinsdale, said the WPB order, if it covers cancellation of the project, will prevent the village from installing an auxiliary turbine generator.

Increased demands for power expected to reach a peak this fall caused the village to order the generator a year ago. Peet said "if all goes well" with the present equipment of the Hinsdale municipal plant the village "may be able to get along for a time."

As a subsidiary of the Detroit concern, the Delta company manufactures light weight power tools for wood and metal operations. Stuckeman, who will be in charge of the plant, said the partnership will continue the policies, methods, and personnel of the business under the same name.

Import Silver Price Boosted; Spur to Mexican Production

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22 (AP).—The state department announced tonight that the ceiling price on imported silver would be raised from 35⅝ to 45 cents an ounce Aug. 31.

The move apparently was designed to encourage Mexican silver mining and thus increase the supplies of foreign silver available for American industrial users, who have largely been precluded from obtaining domestic silver in competition with the statutory price of 71.11 cents an ounce paid by the treasury.

The ceiling will be raised by the Office of Price Administration, which fixed it originally ⅜ of a cent higher than the price paid by the treasury for foreign silver. The original ceiling was reported to have discouraged Mexican mine operators who had been commanding higher prices from American industry.

Mexico Furnishes Most.

The state department said that the decision was reached after discussions with the Mexican government. That country is the largest exporter of silver to the United States, but lesser amounts also come from Canada, Peru, and Chile.

With the scarcity of copper and other strategic metals, silver has been in growing demand for industrial uses, especially in war production. To help meet this demand the treasury recently made available to war industries 42,000 of its 47,000 tons of so-called "free" silver, not used for monetary purposes.

Law Bars Release.

It is barred by law from releasing any of the hoard held as backing for silver certificates. It recently sought congressional sanction to make available 53,000 tons of monetary silver to industry but the request encountered determined opposition from silver-state congressmen.

Raising of the foreign silver price to 45 cents will restore it to the level which prevailed for a long period up to 1939, when the world market dropped steeply. This country cut its price in line with reductions elsewhere. The average price for all foreign silver held by the treasury is about 51 cents an ounce.

England's Debt Triple Rate of Annual Income

BY LARRY RUE.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Aug. 22.—England's national finances ran another £63,400,000 [about $253,600,000] into the red last week, with expenditures at 108 million pounds [about 432 million dollars] and income at £44,600,000 [about $178,400,000]. The national debt rose to 15 billion 148 million pounds [about 60 billion 592 million dollars], which is almost three times the estimated national income, and is equivalent to 334 pounds [$1,336] for every man, woman, and child in the country.

Sir Kingsley Wood.

Despite its serious implications for future British finances, the mounting national debt was scarcely mentioned in the financial press.

Money Circulation Falls.

More attention was given Bank of England returns showing that for the second time since January the country's monetary circulation contracted in the last week by 4 million pounds [about 16 million dollars] to £830,427,000 [about $3,321,888,000].

Most commentators agree, however, that the reduction is seasonal and doubt whether the downward tendency will be maintained. Uneasiness was voiced again about currency inflation, and renewed demands were heard that Chancellor of the Exchequer Sir Kingsley Wood take a leaf from the books of the Canadian and Australian treasuries and peg wages in this country.

Altho the official index of living costs has varied little more than a point either way in the last year, ministry of labor statistics for the first quarter of 1942 indicated a rise of about 13 million pounds [about 52 million dollars] annually in the wages of about 2 million working people.

In the April to June quarter the trend was accelerated, wage increases averaging 38 million pounds [about 152 million dollars] yearly being granted workers.

No Indication of Halt.

There was no indication of halt being called to the workers' demands, and financial writers began to complain that the cycle of competitive wage increases was not only having an adverse effect financially but was "sapping national morale." Expectations that Sir Kingsley would fix wages did not materialize, and it was considered unlikely that any move would be made before parliament reassembles.

Another problem confronting the chancellor was demands of Britons with properties and investments in Malaya, Hongkong, Burma, and other areas under Jap control, that they be compensated for losses. Companies with interests in the area already have made formal representations to the government in this connection.

There'll Be No Ceiling on Christmas Greenery

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22.—No ceiling price will be placed on mistletoe, trees, holly, ferns, plants, and other greenstuffs used during the Christmas eason, Price Administrator Leon Henderson ruled today. He exempted these items from the maximum price regulation on the ground that a price ceiling on such highly seasonal items is impracticable.

ESTABLISH NEW PLAN TO CONTROL LUMBER; FREEZE ORDER LIFTED

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22 (AP).—A new system of priority controls on distribution of all types of soft wood lumber was established today by the War Production board, replacing the present freezing order. All orders for such lumber will be divided into four classes.

In class 1, carrying the top military priorities, will go orders covering most urgent needs.

A second classification, carrying next lower priorities, covers supplies for army, navy, government, and lend-lease requirements; boxing and crating for military purposes, and certain inventory replacements.

The third group covers lumber for such uses as agricultural equipment, automobile trailers, certain defense housing, and maintenance and repairs to specific types of building including industrial plants and railroads.

The fourth group covers lumber for various other boxing and crating, construction of churches, elevators, and schools, when permitted under WPB construction orders, and manufacture of certain products.

In addition, the order, effective Aug. 27, provides WPB may make specific allocations of lumber supplies without regard to preference ratings when such action is necessary to fill direct war requirements.

FILL NEWSPRINT NEEDS SOON, WPB BRANCH ADVISES

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22.—E. W. Palmer, deputy chief of the WPB printing and publishing branch, today urged publishers to stock up on newsprint before the Sept. 30 expiration of the order relaxing restrictions on inventories.

Palmer said that publishers who have not taken advantage of the opportunity to acquire large stocks during the off-peak transportation season may encounter difficulty later when railroad traffic increases.

"A shortage of railroad facilities would disrupt delivery of many of the nearly 6,000 cars of newsprint expected to be transported monthly during the last quarter of the year," he said. "Each newspaper publisher should analyze his newsprint requirements and storage facilities to work out means of filling requirements with the least strain on transportation."

Palmer said that a survey showed publishers' stocks of newsprint as of July 31 represented 67 days' supply, and stocks in newsprint mills an additional 20 days' supply.

SOME RAILROAD BONDS ADVANCE TO AUGUST TOPS

New York, Aug. 22 (AP).—Various rails climbed to new highs for August in today's bond market but there were enough declines to hold the carrier average unchanged at 63.4.

Buying interest persisted in New York Central, New Haven, Southern Pacific, Missouri Pacific-International Great Northern, and Wabash and in the liens of a number of smaller systems.

Fractionally higher at the close were Boston and Maine 4½s at 36¼, Central of Georgia 5s at 18, Central Pacific 5s at 55¾, International Great Northern first 6s at 21⅜, Southern Pacific 4½s of '81 at 53½, and Chicago and Alton 3s at 20¾.

PRODUCTION 7% UNDER QUOTA IN JULY, SAYS WPB

Balance Is Lacking, Nelson Reports.

BY JOHN FISHER.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22.—Obviously irked by the recent barrage of criticism against the War Production Board, Chairman Donald M. Nelson today defended the board's activities. He insisted that all will be well, altho admitting that munitions production in July fell 7 per cent below expectations.

Nelson denied that the army and navy have taken production and priorities control away from the WPB. He declared that the army and navy have no more authority over war production than he has delegated to them.

and outside of the administration. The theme of this criticism has been that Nelson was losing his grip on war production and that output had slumped because of shortages of materials and incompetency in administration.

Output Has Trebled.

Nelson replied today that munitions production, including planes, guns, tanks, ships, and other equipment, increased 16 per cent in July over June and was 3½ times as great as in November, 1941, the month before the Jap attack on Pearl Harbor. However, the July production figure was 7 per cent below estimates early that month, he admitted. He gave this summary on production:

AIRCRAFT—Increased 11 per cent over June output, but combat plane production rose only 6 per cent, "not up to expectations." For the next few months, aircraft production, No. 1 item on the war production list, is not expected to reach production goals planned earlier in the year, due in part to difficulty in balancing so vast a program, but production is expected to increase more in the later part of year.

ORDNANCE—All ordnance in July increased 26 per cent over June and was "very close to schedules." Production of medium tanks was 35 per cent above June and "considerably ahead of schedules." Light tanks increased 15 per cent over June and were ahead of schedules. Output of anti-aircraft guns leaped upward. One class jumped 64 per cent and another 50 per cent, both exceeding schedules by wide margins. Ammunition and explosives exceeded goals with a few exceptions. The record on heavy artillery was mixed, some classes showing good gains and some failing to come into production.

WAR NEWS, TAX HOPES AID STOCK PRICE RECOVERY

Fractional Gains Added to Week's Modest Rise.

New York, Aug. 22 (AP).—Cheerful war news from the Pacific, plus growing hopes for more lenient corporate taxes, helped today's stock market add selective gains to a good recovery week. Advances of small fractions were in the majority at the close, with a few gains of a point or more.

Low priced stocks appeared in blocks of 1,000 to 3,000 shares and helped lift volume to 180,410 shares, the highest two hour figure since June 6. The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was up .1 of a point at 37.2 and on the week showed a net gain of .6.

Peaks For Year or More.

Many new highs for the year or longer were recorded during the day. Sparks-Withington was the liveliest performer, up ½ point to a two year peak on declaration of the first common dividend since 1931 and announcement of increased earnings.

Others at top 1942 quotations included Erie, Texas an Pacific, Postal Telegraph preferred, Amerada, Standard Oil of California, Goodyear, United States Rubber preferred, Nash-Kelvinator, Otis Elevator, Borg-Warner, United Air Lines and National Distillers.

Rails were the strongest group during the week, making further response to mounting revenues. Industrials maintained their balance partly on the idea reduced profits for many companies had been discounted marketwise.

CHICAGO RISE CONTINUES.

The volume leader, Nash-Kelvinator, advanced 1/8 point to reach a 1942 high of 6. Consumers preferred also set a new 1942 peak on a 1 point gain. Deere declined ⅝. Great Lakes Dredge advanced ¼ and Borg-Warner ⅜.

NELSON REPORTS JULY ARMS FLOW 7% UNDER QUOTA

Job Is to Balance Uneven Production, He Says.

merchant vessels weighing 791,667 deadweight tons were delivered to the Maritime commission, nearly the schedule for the month and 6 per cent above the 67 vessels of 747,900 tons produced in June.

NAVAL VESSELS—A gain of about 22 per cent over June in construction. Deliveries of major combat vessels were ahead of those in June and considerably ahead of forecasts. In minor naval vessels, output in June fell materially behind expectations.

Goals Set Last January.

The latest actual figures on munitions production were disclosed by President Roosevelt recently when he said that for May nearly 4,000 airplanes, more than 1,500 tanks, and nearly 2,000 artillery and anti-tank guns were produced. Following this report from the President, however, the Office of War Information issued a report frankly criticizing the progress made militarily and productively, and warning that "we could lose this war."

The high war production goals which the WPB is straining to reach were set by President Roosevelt last Jan. 6 in his annual message to congress. In this message he called for the production of 60,000 planes, including 45,000 for combat; 45,000 tanks, 20,000 anti-aircraft guns, and 8 million deadweight tons of merchant shipping during 1942.

"The big job ahead of us now," said Nelson today, "is to bring our program into balance and make sure that we use our materials and facilities as wisely as possible. We must make sure that we produce promptly those weapons the services must have. We must speed up the slow items and slow down some of the fast ones so that the unbalance which now marks part of the program is brought into adjustment.

"This means that we must redouble our efforts, particularly on the low spots, if we are to make our goals by the year's end."

Reveals Engine Bottleneck.

Nelson said that production of aircraft is most important at this time, as planes are "the best offensive weapon we have," but that production of planes has been delayed by lack of engines. He remarked that there is under construction in Chicago "one of the biggest engine plants in the world" and this should help break the bottleneck. Shortages of high grade alloy steel have been delaying engine production, he said.

"The war production effort has entered a new phase—one in which more careful balancing of requirements will become increasingly important," he said. "For a long range solution, there must be close, effective control of the flow of materials and a comprehensive system of production control, to make certain that the right materials get to the right place at the right time."

Production According to Need.

The job of the WPB is to produce war materials in the order of their importance, as set by the chiefs of staff, said Nelson. Nelson denied recent charges that army and navy officials have acquired certain "veto" powers over priorities to be established by the WPB thru a directive from the army and navy munitions board.

To complaints that he has not exercised in full the powers given him by the President, Nelson replied:

"I always have used my authority. The army, navy, and maritime commission in their production are working for me."

Critics were disappointed that Nelson announced no changes in personnel in the WPB.

Nelson insisted that all is well within his organization except for occasional leaks of confidential reports, which must be stopped. The WPB, army, navy, and maritime commission are working as a team, he declared.

SLUMP IN CORN WEAKENS ALL OTHER GRAINS

Barley Dips on Embargo at Minneapolis.

Weakness in corn unsettled the grain markets on the Chicago Board of Trade yesterday. Corn broke 1⅝ cents a bushel as the result of selling by cash interests and scattered liquidation. Closing prices were at the bottom with net losses of 1¼ to 1⅝ cents. September closed at 83¼ cents.

Wheat lost a cent in sympathy with corn and oats declined ⅝ cent. Rye was off ⅝ to ⅞ cent and sold within a fraction of a cent of the seasonal lows established earlier in the week.

Corn Support Lacking.

There was nothing in the general run of the news to account for the break in corn, brokers said, except that the weather was considered ideal for the development of the big crop. The shipping demand for cash corn which was active early in the week was not in evidence. Elevator men estimated that more than 1 million bushels of cash corn was sold for shipment during the week.

Wheat futures lost 1 to 1¼ cents in the last week and corn 1 to 1⅝ cents.

Embargo Affects Barley.

Announcement that an embargo would be placed on shipments of barley to Minneapolis, effective at midnight last night, had a weakening effect on the market, as it was feared that some of the northwestern grain might be diverted to Chicago. Minneapolis received 670 cars of barley yesterday, a new all time record for a single day's arrival. Receipts of barley last week are said to have exceeded 3½ million bushels.

Hot weather in the corn belt is reported to have resulted in the new crop making rapid progress and reduced the possibility that any appreciable acreage would be damaged by an early frost.

GRADING IN SIGHT AS PLAN TO EASE BEEF SITUATION

Predict Record Supplies Won't Be Realized.

Plan Packer Hearing

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22 [Special].—Hearings to seek solutions to the problems of some 1,300 small meat packers who have been squeezed by price ceilings will be held "at an early date" by the senate committee on American small business, Sen. James E. Murray [D., Mont.], its chairman, said today. Rationing of meat, Murray said, might be avoided if plants closed by inequitable price ceilings could be brought back into full operation.

The Office of Price Administration, in collaboration with the department of agriculture, is laying plans for an extensive meat grading program in an attempt to patch up the much pierced beef ceilings, it was learned at the Chicago Stock yards yesterday. Machinery for grading meat in Chicago and other large packing centers has already been set up. Staff members of the department of agriculture meat inspection force admit the grading plans would not close all loopholes.

An unprecedented liquidation of cattle threatens Secretary of Agriculture Claude Wickard's goal for record production for 1943, it was said.

Farmers Boost Shipments.

During May, the month beef ceilings were established, packers butchered 885,153 head of cattle less than in May, 1941. However, prices began to break and farmers unloaded 1,039,128 cattle during June and 1,047,909 during July.

The general level of live stock prices moved up the last week for the third week in a row. Buyers paid an average of $14.65 for the three principal classes together, steers, hogs, and lambs, compared with $14.60 the preceding week.

Allows Added Costs.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22 [Special].—The Office of Price Administration today announced that certain costs may be added to the maximum prices on sales of beef and veal carcasses and wholesale cuts to the armed forces and the Federal Surplus Commodities corporation under an amendment to maximum price regulations.

The amendment permits sellers in these transactions to add actual cost of freezing and special packaging for overseas shipment and add transportation charges in car route sales to F. O. B. shipping point prices.

"LEVERAGE."

During a period of higher corporate earnings, more attention is focused on common stocks having "leverage" with respect to earnings and assets. The influence of this factor should be carefully examined by the investor.

When the percentage increase or decrease in earnings applicable to the common stock of a corporation is larger than the percentage increase or decrease in total net income, the common stock is said to have "leverage" with respect to earnings.

This occurs when the common stock is preceded by preferred stock, a funded debt or both. Bonds have a first lien on company earnings. If preferred stock is outstanding, dividend requirements must be met before common stockholders can share in the profits.

The leverage results when earnings increase beyond the point required to meet fixed charges and preferred dividends. In a period when earnings rise rapidly beyond this point, the percentage increase in net income applicable to common shares would be larger than the percentage rise in total net income.

For example, if a company's net income rose from 1 million dollars in 1940 to 2 million dollars in 1941, and preferred stock dividend requirements amounted to $500,000 in each year, $500,000 would have been available for the common stock in 1940, and 1½ million dollars in 1941.

The 100 per cent increase in total net income would result in a 200 per cent increase in earnings applicable to common stock.

Conversely, when earnings decline toward the "break even level," the percentage decline in net income available for the common stock is as proportionately large. When earnings fall below preferred dividend requirements for a number of years, leverage common stocks often are submerged under a pile of preferred dividend accumulations.

Common stocks not subject to preferred stock dividend requirements or fixed charges do not have leverage. A 10 per cent rise or fall in net income would result in a 10 per cent rise or fall in earnings on the common.

In the case of a capitalization consisting of more than a single class of common stock, the principle of leverage may apply to assets as well as income. If the par value of the preferred stock is constant, any increase in asset value would accrue to the common shares. This most often applies to investment companies. No increase in asset value would accrue to bonds, since they represent merged under a pile of preferred a lien on the property of the company, not a share in its assets and earnings.

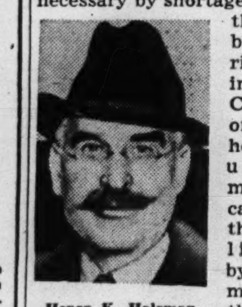
New Construction Methods Save Time and Materials in CHA Housing Project

ARCHITECT OF CABRINI HOMES TELLS RESULTS

War Homes to Be Dedicated Next Saturday.

BY AL CHASE.
[Real Estate Editor.]

How construction innovations made necessary by shortages, priorities, and the rising cost of building materials were used in the Frances Cabrini homes, one of four war housing projects under development by the Chicago Housing authority, was outlined yesterday by Henry K. Holsman, chairman of the architectural group which designed them.



Henry K. Holsman.

Originally proposed in 1940 as a slum clearance project, it was converted to one for war workers and actual construction was started by the S. N. Nielsen company three days after the attack on Pearl Harbor. It will be dedicated next Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, at Cambridge avenue and Locust street.

New Methods Developed.

Several new methods of construction were developed, Holsman said. First, a new, smooth, inexpensive, durable flooring was used for the 455,000 square feet of floors [nearly 10½ acres]. Instead of the regular fireproof concrete floor made of cement and sand, a sort of terrazzo floor was made by using various degrees of crushed limestone [instead of sand and marble chips] and concrete. This was ground smooth with machines, and the result, he said, was a beautiful, smooth floor economically made in a single operation.

"These are the first of their kind to be constructed in a residence," Holsman said, "and will prove to be the most serviceable, most sanitary, and least expensive to maintain. A coat of wax is the only surface treatment necessary."

Another new time and material saving method was employed in stair construction, Holsman said, which eliminated the use of stages and ladders normally used in home building. Prefabricated one-piece stairs and landings made of light steel frame and sheet metal were put in place as soon as the floors were laid.

Save Time and Materials.

These metal stairs, which required only two men to place in position, were used without any extra treatment or precautions thruout the construction work. After the building was finished, precast concrete treads, similar to the flooring, were set in mortar on the stair frames, resulting in an economical fireproof stair.

In the construction of the interior walls, doors, and windows, an entirely new process was used which saved much critical material and time, Holsman explained. Operations were cut from six to three, resulting in a wall which was found, when tested, to be twice as strong and much less expensive than the original.

The Frances Cabrini homes, north and west of Chicago and Hudson avenues, comprising 586 dwelling units in two and three story buildings, are being rented to families of war workers earning under $2,100 a year.

The new homes rent at different levels depending upon the family's income so as to amount to approximately one week's wages of the tenant. For families earning less than $1,200 a year, rents range between $20.50 and $25 a month; for families earning between $1,200 and $1,500 a year, from $25 to $28; for incomes of $1,500 to $1,800 the rent is from $30 to $33, and for those earning between $1,800 and $2,100, the rent is from $35 to $38. All rentals include electricity, gas, refrigeration, hot water, and fuel for heating.

REALTORS PICK A TIRE SAVING SITE FOR OUTING

With tire saving in mind, the Chicago Real Estate board made a survey of country clubs which can be reached by train and yesterday announced that Olympia Fields has been chosen for the annual fall outing, to be held on Wednesday, Sept. 16. All members of the board and their guests are invited to attend, Stephen V. Ronksley, committee chairman, announced. Baseball, horseshoe pitching, and other entertainment are planned in addition to golf.

Duplex Homes for War Workers

Defense Units Used to Screen Bigger Houses

Carrothers & Braun, Inc., which has completed 100 residential units with an average sales price of $11,500 in the Galewood area, north of Oak Park, is erecting 44 $6,000 "defense homes" as buffers between the more expensive homes and any possible undesirable development to the east or west, it was announced yesterday.

Martin H. Braun, secretary treasurer and designer of the corporation's homes, said that half of the houses will be for sale and the remainder for rent.

44 Units Nearing Completion.

Eleven duplex houses, containing 22 units, are nearing completion on the west side of the 1700 block in Nashville avenue, to be sold for $6,000 for land and building of each five room unit. Eleven other duplex houses, of 22 units, are being completed on the east side of Oak Park avenue, in the 1700 block. These all have been rented to war workers at $50 per month, Braun reported.

Each of the units under construction contains five rooms: Living room, dinette, and kitchen on the first floor; two bedrooms and bath on the second floor, and a full basement.

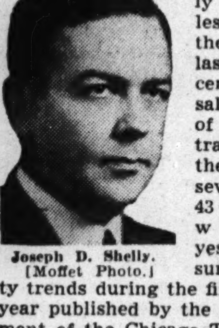
Homes Are Smaller.

Braun said that building materials used in these "defense homes" are of the same quality as in the more expensive residences his firm has built—they merely are smaller.

"We have no sales problem today," Braun said. "Our rental units were all rented before they were under roof, and our sales units are selling faster than we can complete them."

House Sales Dip in 1942, Survey Shows

Altho house sales during the first six months of 1942 have been approximately 10 per cent less than during the same period last year, the percentage of home sales to the total of all realty transactions was the highest in several years, or 43 per cent. This was disclosed yesterday in a summary of realty trends during the first half of this year published by the escrow department of the Chicago Title and Trust company.



Joseph D. Shelly.

The percentage of apartment sales—also 43 per cent of the total—also was highest in several years. Commercial sales were only 8 per cent of the total, and vacant 6 per cent, both the lowest ratio in years.

All cash sales of realty represented a high proportion of the total, according to Joseph D. Shelly, chief escrow officer of the title company, altho slightly less than last year. So far this year 86 per cent of all escrow sales have been entirely cash. For the first half of last year they amounted to 92 per cent of the total.

The total amount of money used in cash transactions closed thru the escrow department during the first half of this year was $26,067,953 compared with $30,698,500 for the same period last year, Shelly said.

Occupied by War Workers

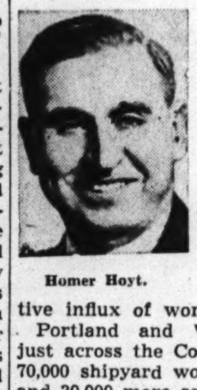
Four of the 70 war workers' homes built this year by Shekleton & Co., in the area between 51st and Archer, Central and Austin. These are at 5229 to 5235 South Mayfield avenue. All are owned and occupied by war workers.

Seattle and Portland Need 90,000 War Worker Homes

This is the third and last of a series of studies of wartime housing conditions on the Pacific coast by Homer Hoyt, director of research of the Chicago Plan commission.

Housing war workers within commuting or walking distance of the shipyards is the chief problem of Portland, Ore., and Seattle, Wash. There are no vacancies in either of these Pacific coast cities, and it is estimated that approximately 90,000 new living quarters will be needed to care for the prospective influx of workers.



Homer Hoyt.

Portland and Vancouver, Wash., just across the Columbia river, have 70,000 shipyard workers in six yards and 30,000 more are expected. Workers drive to their jobs in automobiles from as far as Salem, Ore., 50 miles away.

Erect "Wreckable" Homes.

On a hill 1½ miles from the Vancouver shipyards 4,000 little box-like homes on concrete pegs have been erected to shelter families of shipbuilders. These are called "wreckable" because they are expected to be torn down after the war.

Portland expects an allotment of 10,000 more government built dwelling units. Thousands of workers now come to Portland shipyards in automobiles. If rubber fails, ferries, railroad lines, and abandoned trolley lines will be pressed into service to provide mass transportation.

Seattle Expects 60,000.

Seattle with its great Boeing airplane plant, its shipyards, and the nearby Bremerton navy yard already employing over 70,000 workers, expects a further increase of 60,000. So far Seattle has provided mostly permanent housing, both public and private, for its war workers, but the emergency may require thousands of hastily built frame "wreckable" houses.

What will become of these war houses and war workers when peace comes disturbs some of the citizens, but the speedy construction of ships is now the paramount consideration and ships can't be built if the workers have no shelter or no tires on which to reach their homes.

GUARDIAN LIFE GETS $727,000 FOR PROPERTIES

Since the first of the year the Chicago Mortgage Investment company has sold 12 properties for the Guardian Life Insurance company of America for $727,000, according to Ralph A. Hunt, president. Among them was a large rooming house at 4304-14 Sheridan road, sold for $135,000, the 24 flat building at 6818-30 Sheridan road, $110,000, and the 24 flat building, 7526-36 Colfax avenue, $91,500.

North Side 27 Apartment Building Sold for $88,500

The 37 flat building at 845 West Agatite avenue was sold yesterday by Rudolph and Mildred Koegel to Emil Ehrenberg for $88,500, Solomon Axelrod, attorney for the buyer, reported.

Hillman's Buys Broadway Property; May Occupy It

Hillman's, Inc., yesterday bought the vacant two story building, 50x72 feet, at 4631 Broadway, from the John W. Schloesser estate for $30,000. The first floor formerly was occupied by a Hillman store under lease. A company official said the building may be remodeled and again be used by Hillman's.

Corporation Buys North Side Flats for $87,500

The 44 flat building at 4720-32 North Racine avenue, lot 139 by 160 feet, was sold by the Pennsylvania Mutual Life Insurance company to the Racine Investment corporation for $87,500, according to the county records. The building contains three and four room suites and four shops.

BUILD 230 HOMES FOR WORKERS IN LAST TWO YEARS

Shekleton & Co. Expects to Add 150 More.

Shekleton & Co., which has built and sold 230 homes in the last two years in the area bounded by 51st street, Central, Archer, and Austin avenues, reported yesterday it was seeking priorities for 150 more residential units.

Vincent Shekleton said his firm has built 70 homes since the first of the year, all of them sold and 15 of which are nearing completion. All were financed with FHA loans thru the Central National bank. The homes, designed by Joseph Dooley, architect, have five rooms each, and occupy 35 by 125 foot lots. All have solid brick walls, most of them of the same quality on all sides, with full basements.

Have 150 Sites Left.

"We have 150 home sites left in the area we've been building in," said Shekleton, "and if we can get priorities on building materials we will improve these lots as fast as we can build.

"There will be no difficulty in either selling or renting them. We have at least 15 inquiries daily for homes to rent. Our properties are only a short distance from Studebaker, Crane, International Harvester, and the Central Manufacturing district, and not far from the new Chrysler aircraft engine plant, and other big war factories.

Work at EElectro-Motive Plant.

"Several of our home buyers work at the Electro-Motive corporation's plant at McCook, so we expect to have purchasers from among workers at the big plant of the Aluminum Company of America near Electro-Motive."

Shekleton predicted that the entire area bounded by 51st street, Harlem avenue, 63d street, and Central avenue, would, if building conditions improve, become the fastest growing section of Chicago. It has the Clearing Industrial district on the south and a belt of big war plants on the other three sides.

Lussky, White & Coolidge, Inc., one of Chicago's oldest merchandising concerns, wholesale dealer in hardware and upholstering, has purchased the property at 214-16 West Monroe street, for $91,000. Albert H. Wetten & Co. was broker. The land, fronting 40 feet, and with a depth of 190 feet, is improved with a seven story, granite front, fireproof building, occupied for many years by Remington Rand, Inc. The most recent assessors' valuation of land and building is $218,000. The buyer has a lease expiring next May and expects to move some time before that date from its present location at 65-71 West Lake street, where it has been for the last 40 years.

TWELVE STORY HOTEL SOLD BY ROYAL NEIGHBORS

The 12 story Stonehenge apartment hotel, at 6319 Kenwood avenue, was sold yesterday by the Royal Neighbors of America to the M. S. R. Building corporation for $350,000, according to the county records. Of this amount $285,000 was a purchase money mortgage, 20 years at 4½ per cent. The building contains 144 furnished suites and occupies a 50 by 165 foot lot.

Tipoff on Autumn.

Aug. 22, 1942.

THE outdoor fan or farmer who takes an hour or two each week to wander thru a wood lot becomes aware of seasonal changes long before the city dweller realizes that another season is near.

The reason for this is easily apparent. City dwellers have only a few signposts to tell them when spring succeeds winter and fall overtakes summer. They notice the changes in the temperance, the appearances of foliage, and the texture of the clothes their neighbors wear. Farmers and hikers who are acquainted with nature's thousands of seasonal signals start getting hints of spring as early as February, and now they are noticing evidences of autumn long before the leaves start falling.

Hickories Turn Brown.

When we hiked around the Wheaton farm this week we saw many signs of autumn. The leaves retain their green gloss, but the shagbark hickories are starting to turn brown, and by viewing any of the farm wood lots from a distance it is easy to pick the fading hickories from the sturdier oaks. Some of the varieties of grapes are ripe, and we had our first vineyard samples this week. The wild grapes, too, are purple on the vines draped over the farm's rail fences.

Wild chokecherry trees are loaded with fruit, and some of the farm wives have been making wild cherry jelly. Along the farm roads we found a few blue blazing stars, which rank with the cardinal flowers and goldenrods in the early autumn wildflower parade.

Excavation Job.

All these signs of the new season may be noticed by riding or hiking thru the farm fields, but to get two additional evidences of fading summer we had to do some minor excavating and a little sampling. Four weeks ago we pulled several wild Jerusalem artichokes out of the ground to examine their tubrous roots, which the Indians used as a substitute for potatoes. At that time the tubers were about the size of a lady's finger. When we pulled a couple more this week the tubers were more fully developed, one being about three-fourths of an inch in diameter, certainly large enough to be used for food.

The sampling was necessary to identify another of the late summer wildflowers noticed along one of the farm roads. We weren't sure of the identity of a colony of small white and light purple flowers along the highway until we broke one of the flower stems and chewed it. The taste of onion was unmistakable. The plants with the attractive flowers were wild onions.

NAVY IS TRAINING 50 YOUNG FLYERS AT LEWIS SCHOOL

Basic Instruction Will Speed War Program.

BY WAYNE THOMIS.

Fifty future combat pilots for the navy are receiving their first flight instruction at the Lewis School of Aeronautics in Lockport. The boys, taking the first step along a training course that will put them into action on the world's ocean air fronts by the fall and winter of 1943, also are assisting the navy in an important experiment.

For these boys and dozens of similar groups now undergoing initial flight and ground training at civilian flying schools are the first navy men to commence their flying away from a regular navy air base. The reason for this break in tradition is the navy's desire to speed up the yearlong period for training of a pilot by using to the limit civilian flight training facilities that hitherto have contributed little to the direct war effort.

Follows Army Program.

Lockport's contingent is a typical group and the Lewis school is representative of the civilian agencies that are joining in the national navy flight training program. In this the navy is paralleling to some extent the tremendous expansion program for its air branch that the army also has under way.

Reveille is at 5:30 a. m. at the Lewis school. There is a great scurrying thru the neat dormitories that in other years housed civilian engineering students. The boys awaken reluctantly, scrub teeth, run a comb through their close cropped hair, slip into khaki trousers and blouses and form up at 6 o'clock for drill and calisthenics.

Breakfast in the big school dining room comes at 7, and the boys ravenously down their food. Most of them have gained in weight and general health in the three to four weeks they have been in training.

Fly for Half the Day.

Half the group flies in the morning and half in the afternoon. Those not flying are attending classes which include a dozen subjects pertaining to navy affairs. The first class of the day, however, has every boy in the group and is devoted to studies of the civil air regulations and aircraft identification.

Flying for the "A" group begins at 9 a. m. and continues until noon. Dinner lasts from 12 to 1. Then for the next half hour the entire 50 sit in on an International Morse Code class. At 1:30 p. m. "B" group begins flying and "A" goes to school. Supper comes at 5 p. m. From 6 to 7 p. m. there is another mass meteorology class, and from 7:30 to 9:30 p. m. there is a final class in navigation, military science and discipline.

When "lights out" comes at 10:15 p. m. there is not a boy who wants to stay awake.

The training is rigorous and advancement must be shown. Those who prove unfit for flying are weeded out here at a minimum of time and expense for the navy. Experience already has shown that few boys who successfully complete these civilian school courses are washed out at the navy's regular training centers, altho more than one-third of the boys who have had no flight training are dropped.

Other Students at School.

With its navy students the Lewis school has a number of civilian flight students and also 26 youths training to become army air corps flying instructors. The flight training has not halted the regular educational courses at the school and enrollments for the fall term, beginning Sept. 28, already are coming in.

The Lewis school has been recognized by the Illinois State Examining Board for Teachers' Certificates as a special school of aeronautics. Three and four year aeronautical engineering courses are offered in addition to the flight training. The students will live in the dormitories with the army and navy fledglings, it is now planned.

John Wilson, formerly superintendent of the school, resigned recently to take charge of an army air corps advanced glider training base in Texas. Albert H. Luke, who was the school's first pilot and who has been chief flight instructor for the last three years, was appointed superintendent on Aug. 17. Al Luke has been flying since 1929 and in recent years often flew charter trips for THE TRIBUNE.

British Approval of Force Hailed.

New York, Aug. 22 [Special].—The movement for a full fledged Jewish army of stateless and Palestinian Jews has been greatly intensified in this country since the British government recently permitted the organization of a Palestinian regiment composed one battalion of Jews and one of Arabs for service in the middle east.

"The issue of the Jewish army is entering a decisive phase," said Pierre van Paassen, the author, who is national chairman of the Committee for a Jewish Army.

"The British government, under constant pressure of public opinion in England and the United States, has given up its former negative stand toward the Jewish army demand.

Sign of Understanding.

"Sir James Grigg's announcement of the immediate creation of a Palestinian regiment with distinct Jewish and Arabic battalions was the first timid, half hearted sign of understanding of this demand on the part of the British government.

"By their announcement of the Palestinian regiment, the British authorities withdrew all their arguments against the principle of a separate Jewish army. For, if there is no opposition to a small token Jewish unit, there certainly cannot be any justification to large Jewish units, divisions, or army corps."

The committee has contended that a Jewish army of 200,000 stateless and Palestinian Jews, in the middle east or in any other theater of war, would be a great contribution toward winning the war.

"The Jews feel that they should be given the privilege of fighting the most cruel enemy in their whole history and that democracies should grant to the first and most persecuted viction of Hitler's aggression the elementary right to fight back," the committee asserted.

"Can Be No Dunkirk."

"This army will fight on all required battlefields side by side with the United States, Great Britain, and the other allied nations. The Russians, Chinese, Filipinos, and the British themselves have proved that men fight best and most fiercely when they are fighting for their families, their homes, their native soil. The Jews must fight to the bitter end because, for them, surrender to the Nazis is worse than death. There can be no Dunkirk for the Jews."

It is estimated that the Jewish population of the world totals 17 million. There are approximately 5 million Jews in the United States, half of whom live in New York City.

Rival 'Dooms' Kaiser Plan; Nelson Seeking Solution

'Materials Lacking'

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 22 [Special].—Harry Woodward, president of Consolidated Aircraft corporation, predicted today that Henry Kaiser's plan to build 70 ton military cargo planes will collapse because of a shortage of materials.

"The plan would not result in increase of production," he said, "because the materials are not there."

If materials are available, he continued, the aircraft industry—which long ago anticipated the need for military cargo planes and now is building proven types—should be given them. Woodward is vice president of the Aircraft War Production Council, in which eight Pacific coast manufacturers have banded. He might be said to speak for the industry.

Ample Production Capacity.

"We are in production today on air freighters and transports which are doing a very satisfactory job," he said, citing Consolidated's B-24, the Douglas C-54, C-17, and C-53, and the Curtiss - Wright Commando. "Our progress with them is governed not by lack of capacity or ability, but by lack of materials.

"We think it would be fine to build the proposed cargo planes in time to do some good, not two or three years from today.

"I might mention that four B-24s can carry the same load as a Mars, but one Mars would cost as much as five B-24s."

Can Double Present Output.

Woodward said the aircraft industry has no "feeling of resistance" toward the Kaiser plan, but first would like to know what that plan is and how materials can be provided for it, if not for planes already in production.

"The aircraft manufacturers can more than double their present production of cargo planes, and promptly, if that is the military policy decision reached by the army and navy," he said.

WPB Still Hopes

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22 (AP).—Donald M. Nelson, chairman of the War Production Board, today said he hopes to "go right down the line" with Henry J. Kaiser, west coast shipbuilder, who proposes to build a fleet of giant cargo carrying planes.

Nelson added, however, that before Kaiser can be given a go ahead signal, a number of questions have to be answered—whether Kaiser's proposal can be carried out without interfering with the combat plane production program, for one.

Up to Chiefs of Staff.

Nelson told a press conference that he believes large cargo planes are needed in prosecution of the war. Ultimately, he said, the combined chiefs of staff must decide the emphasis to be placed on cargo plane production.

The WPB, Nelson told newsmen, is making a "perfectly honest attempt" to find the answer to various questions raised by Kaiser's proposals.

For one thing, he said, it must be determined whether sufficient engines will be available. In this connection, Nelson said "tremendous expansion" is under way in this field, and that one of the largest plants in the world is being built in Chicago to be devoted entirely to engine production.

Hold Conference Tomorrow.

Nelson said that Kaiser will meet with Grover Loening, a WPB official, and leaders of the aircraft industry on the west coast Monday. Those to attend include Donald Douglas and Glenn L. Martin, airplane builders.

Loening is a pioneer in the aircraft industry and long has advocated the construction of aerial freighters.

Asked whether he thought cargo planes are the answer to the submarine menace, Nelson replied, "not a complete answer." In his opinion it is a question of quick movement of essential articles, with surface ships still hauling most of the heavy freight and foodstuffs.

EX-STEWARDESS' GUNSHOT DEATH TERMED SUICIDE

The death of Mrs. Catherine Wingfield Bassett, 30 years old, of a bullet wound in the basement of her home at 524 West 72d street Friday was termed suicide while temporarily insane because of despondency by a coroner's jury headed by Deputy Coroner Jack Przyolinski yesterday.

Her husband, Frank A. Bassett, a salesman for the United States Gypsum company, told the jury that his wife, a former stewardess for American Air Lines, had been in ill health since the birth of their son, Thomas, four months ago. He said she had given no indication that she planned to take her life.

Funeral services will be at 10 a. m. tomorrow in the chapel at Erie street and Wabash avenue.

Civil Service Commission Seeks Navy Yard Helpers

The 7th district [Chicago] of the United States Civil Service commission announced yesterday that it is now making direct appointments here of general helpers at the Portsmouth, Va., navy yard. Workers with metal or wood fabricating experience, or who have had defense training courses in those fields, will be appointed at a training salary of $5.36 a day and then will become naval ordnance men, when trained, at pay ranging up to $7.12 a day plus overtime.

TANKERS TO AID SHIPMENT OF OIL PRODUCTS EAST

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22 (AP).—The petroleum coördinator's office announced today it had approved a plan for emergency movement of essential oil products to the east thru use of Great Lakes tankers and barges between Toledo and Cleveland.

these facilities to accomplish the earliest utilization of pipe lines now being rearranged, expanded and extended in Indiana, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, the announcement said.

Pends Completion of Line.

It is to remain in effect pending completion of a new 100 mile pipe line across Ohio from Fostoria to Akron, which will eliminate need for lake movement to Cleveland. Deputy Coördinator Ralph K. Davies said it was planned to obtain government financing for the line and to build it with second hand pipe.

Preliminary surveys and other engineering details are now being developed, he said, and construction of the line could be completed before the close of navigation on Lake Erie.

Davies said the plan provided:

1. An increase in the capacity of the Shell Oil company's Zionville, Ind., to Lima, O., pipe line from 15,000 to 23,000 barrels daily by installation of a new pump station at Muncie, Ind.

Involves Several Transfers.

2. Connection at Zionville of the pipe lines of Standard Oil Company of Indiana and Shell, and sale by Standard to Shell, for movement to Lima, of 8,000 barrels of products daily. At Lima Shell will deliver this amount to Standard Oil of Ohio, which will move it to Toledo in its Lima-Toledo products pipe line.

3. Movement of the 8,000 barrels daily from Toledo to Cleveland by water, with an additional 7,000 barrels daily which will originate at Toledo.

4. Movement from Cleveland to Akron, by lines of Standard Oil of Ohio and the Sun-Susquehanna system, supplemented by transport truck if necessary, of 15,000 barrels daily.

5. Reversal of the Sun-Susquehanna line between Akron and Newark, N. J., as is being done, to make possible a 15,000 barrel daily movement to Newark.

ACT TO REVOKE CITIZENSHIP OF GERMAN NATIVE

The fourth petition since the attack on Pearl Harbor asking the denaturalizing of a citizen because of continued Nazis sympathies was filed yesterday by J. Albert Woll, federal district attorney. It names Ernest Henry Scharf, 39 years old, who lives at Junior terrace, Hawthorne lane, Des Plaines.

Scharf, a spotter in a cleaning and dyeing plant, came to the United States in March of 1925 and received his final citizenship papers in December of 1932.

Woll's petition is in the nature of a civil action, in that Scharf is given 60 days in which to set up a defense. If he fails to defend himself, his citizenship is lost by default.

The petition charges that Scharf's citizenship was obtained thru fraud, in that he was and is an ardent pro-Nazi, that he has drilled and helped organize uniformed troops wearing the swastika insignia, that he commonly greets his friends with the Nazi salute and that he is given to shouts of "heil Hitler."

Dr. Otto Willumeit, former Chicago leader of the German-American bund who was sentenced to five years in prison in Hartford, Conn., Friday on a charge of conspiracy to delive American military secrets to the axis, may be brought to Chicago this week to testify before the special grand jury investigating seditious activities in the Chicago area.

IOWA NEWSPAPER DISPUTES EAST'S APATHY CHARGES

Albia, Ia., Aug. 22 [Special].—A cartoon by John T. McCutcheon which appeared recently in THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE was the inspiration for a special "war effort" edition of the Monroe County News, weekly newspaper published here, K. C. Crabb, manager, said today. The cartoon was entitled "Why the West Resents Eastern Criticism on 'War Apathy.'"

The special edition appeared this week with a 12 page section recounting Monroe county's participation in the war effort. Albia is a city of 5,000 population located 68 miles southeast of Des Moines.

The edition is designed an as answer to expressions of concern in eastern states about the "complacency of the middle west with regard to the war situation." A front page editorial points out that Iowa was one of 41 states to exceed its May war bond quota and one of six to go over the top again in June.

There are 426 Monroe county men in the armed services, 217 of whom enlisted and 209 were drafted. Names of these men are listed in the special edition, and separate pages are devoted to the war activities of the Rotary, Lions, and Commercial clubs, and the American Legion.

Injured Woman Is Found Lying on Railway Track

Hyde Park police found Mrs. Florence Gallagher, 44 years old, 4040 Ellis avenue, lying on the Illinois Central railroad tracks early yesterday suffering from head injuries. Police said Mrs. Gallagher apparently had walked into the side of a train. The woman, who remembered nothing about the accident, was being treated at County hospital for head injuries and a fractured wrist.

INDIANS' GREAT WHITE FATHER IS CHICAGOAN NOW

250 Employes to Open Office Tomorrow.

Chicago becomes the center for the administration of American Indian affairs with the opening tomorrow of the Interior department's Office of Indian Affairs in the Merchandise Mart. The office is one of a dozen federal agencies which have been transferred here from Washington, D. C., in a move to relieve wartime congestion in the capital.

To the 400,000 American Indians in this country and Alaska, Chicago henceforth will be the seat of the Great White Father, popularly considered the symbol of the federal government.

Half of Employés Indians.

The office is staffed with 250 employés, half of them Indians, moved be recruited from the middle west and west. The headquarters will occupy 70,000 square feet of the 10th and 24th floors of the mart. From those offices the work of 7,600 teachers, nurses, physicians, engineers, farm experts, and other field employés will be directed.

Barton Greenwood, chief administrative officer of the Indian bureau, in describing the functions of the office, emphasized that the public is not familiar with its work.

Contrary to some public misconceptions, the Indians are not a vanishing people, they are not denied the right of citizenship, and they do not live on a government dole, he said.

Own 55 Million Acres.

He said they own 55 million acres of land, are continuing to make important contributions to American civilization, are growing in population, and are slowly assuming a more active rôle in the country's economic life.

A large part of the Indian office's operations is concerned with administration of Indian owned lands which are held in trust by the federal government, Greenwood said. Indians may not sell this land or any mineral rights without obtaining approval from the secretary of the interior. Thus, whenever an Indian or tribe wishes to sell land under the trust, the entire transaction is scrutinized and supervised by the federal bureau to protect Indian rights.

4,000 Treaties, Statutes.

More than 4,000 treaties and statutes govern Indian affairs, he observed. As a result, the office is preoccupied with a complexity of legal relationships which differ with each tribe. For example, he said, the government is required on Nov. 11 each year to distribute $1,000 worth of calico to the Seneca Indians in New York.

To compensate the Indians for the lands taken from them by the white settlers, the federal government has established a complete welfare service to help the Indians support and govern themselves.

Friend of the Yanks

[The Friend of the Yanks department will answer questions about the draft and military service, both in the daily columns and by mail, if stamped, self-addressed envelopes are sent with the queries.]

C. U. S. writes: "I am 31 years of age, enlisted for duration, and taking training in the civilian pilots training for instructors. I have a wife and child and as far as I've been able to learn, there is no government insurance available to men of our status. What would happen to my dependents if something happened to me?"

ANSWER: Immediately upon entering active duty you may apply for the regular national service life insurance up to the amount of $10,000 available to all men in service. During your training period you are protected by a $3,000 life and dismemberment policy. In addition, there is $1,000 covering hospitalization, with special provision for sickness during training. Even emergency operations are covered.

N. T. A. asks: "Can navy personnel who are qualified transfer to the new commissioned warrant officer grade? What warrant officer and other personnel can transfer?"

ANSWER: It has been announced that the new warrant and commissioned warrant grade of ship's clerk, photographer, aerographer, and torpedoman, and chief ship's clerk, chief photographer, chief aerographer, and chief torpedoman may be appointed from personnel serving in other grades. Requests for transfer are activated thru the commanding officer and forwarded to the bureau of naval personnel. All appointments are for "temporary service."

S. L. H. writes: "I have been in the air corps for over three months and I would like to apply for officer training. I am stationed where there is no regular army office, and wondered if you could tell me the proper procedure for applying?"

ANSWER: The only procedure you can follow is to apply for admission to the officers' candidate school thru your immediate superior, and have him forward your request to the proper authorities.

H. H. O. asks: "Is there any way of wording the beneficiary in the government insurance policy to read in favor of my wife and/or my father so that the survivor would receive the full face value of the policy? I mean so that the survivor receives the other's share?"

ANSWER: Upon due proof of death of the first beneficiary after payment has been made of at least one monthly instalment, thereafter monthly instalments in the same amount shall be paid to the person or persons entitled as beneficiary until all of such instalments shall have been paid. If you want a certain amount of your insurance to accrue to your wife which will not be dependent upon your father's death, you should take out two separate policies, making your father beneficiary and your wife contingent beneficiary of one policy, and your wife sole beneficiary of the second policy.

MOVE TO REDUCE AUTO INSURANCE RATES IN EAST

BY HAL FOUST.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22.—In the gas rationed Atlantic seaboard states there is a move to reduce automobile insurance rates in proportion to the reductions in risks brought about by the curtailment in car operation.

The national safety council figures for the first six months of 1942 show a national reduction in automobile fatalities of 15 per cent as compared with last year.

The June figure country-wide was 32 per cent below June of 1941. Incidentally, this department of THE TRIBUNE forecast this trend at the turn of the year, while the national safety council in a news release predicted an increase in accidents, owing to thin tires.

Driving Reduced.

The American Automobile association this week reported nation-wide reductions in driving mileage.

The Government Employés' Insurance company in the District of Columbia claims to be the first automobile insurance company to make allowances in its rates for the reduced risk. It claimed a cut of 20 per cent in both bodily injury and property damage liabilities for holders of the basic gasoline ration of four gallons a week. For holders of supplemental allowances for work driving, the company granted a 10 per cent cut. New York state has recommended cuts in auto insurance rates.

The American Automobile association reported that recreational highway travel for June was down more than 55 per cent for the nation as a whole, while general highway traffic was down more than 30 per cent. In the rationed area, recreational travel during June decreased more than 70 per cent and in the unrationed area approximately 50 per cent.

Its estimates were based on motor club reports, toll bridge traffic, national park visitation, official traffic counts and motor court business.

Voluntary Limitation.

"This reduction in recreational and general travel outside the rationed area indicates that voluntary limitation of car use is much greater than has been intimated by official statements emanating from Washington," said Thos. P. Henry of Detroit, president of AAA. "Travel to national parks outside the rationed area was 55.1 per cent lower in June of this year than it was during the corresponding month of 1941, while routings handled by motor clubs outside the rationed area decreased 57.4 per cent from June of last year.

"Naturally, travel reduction has been more severe in the east where motorists are reducing car use both because of the tire situation and because of gasoline rationing. Along the Atlantic seaboard motor club routings in June were 73 per cent below the month last year and the number of vehicles entering national parks was about 74 per cent lower.

"The number of passenger cars traversing toll bridges was 51.4 per cent lower than in June of last year in the rationed area and about 20 per cent lower for the remainder of the country. These counts, of course, include in many instances strictly local traffic as well as highway travel of comparatively longer distances.

June Traffic Down 38.5 Per Cent.

"Highway traffic counts made by the public roads administration with automatic traffic counters show June traffic in the rationed area down 38.5 per cent and 22.4 per cent lower in the nonrationed area. Since these figures include all vehicles, passenger car travel is down more than this ratio, since there has been a substantial increase in commercial vehicle traffic on the highways.

"Scattered perliminary reports for July indicate that the cut in automobile use will be much more pronounced as the summer advances.

"In the main, our travel findings for the midyear indicate that motorists all over the nation are using their cars very sparingly indeed for recreational travel or for comparatively long distance trips whether for business or pleasure purposes. While the reduction has been much more severe in the east, the trend toward substantial reduction in highway travel is quite marked in the remainder of the country. In a word, the great majority of motorists are showing a marked tendency to coöperate wholeheartedly in reduction of car mileage in an effort to make their present tire equipment last as long as possible."

VOICE OF TRAFFIC

A MOTORMAN REPLIES.

Chicago, Aug. 19.—Automobile drivers don't have a lot to yell about street car motormen. Your section publishes every goofy complaint about street cars. You ought to print the other side of the story.

Stand on the platform of a street car and watch the silly and selfish automobile drivers. One will pull to the left of a loaded platform right in front of a street car and stop for a red light keeping the street car from reaching the platform. In some cities this is against the law and the law is enforced. It ought to be in Chicago.

Watch drivers race to get ahead of a street car on a crowded narrow street. You would think that that driver's time was more valuable than the time of 60 street car passengers.

Occasionally there is a delivery truck driver who even parks on a street car track to unload. A jail sentence would not be too severe for this offense. Some motorists act as if a street car should get out of their way.

Automobile owners should bear in mind that a street car cannot leave its tracks. They should also bear in mind that the street car is hauling away many more passengers than any single automobile, and, therefore, should have some rights in traffic. MOTORMAN.

LONE DRIVERS.

Chicago, Aug. 20.—I wait for a northbound bus every evening at Michigan avenue and Ohio street. The buses are all overloaded in the jam of traffic, and there are many passenger cars with vacant seats. I don't know why I am not invited to a lift. I am no follies' beauty, and it has been years since I had any illusions of feminine appeal. I am sure that I look like what I am, a respectable business woman. I don't know why these men drivers don't give me a ride when transportation conditions are as bad as they are. STENOGRAPHER.

FAVORS SPEED.

Chicago, Aug. 17.—I can't loaf on the highways at 40 miles an hour or slower and make a living. I am a traveling salesman.

I appreciate that our country needs rubber, and we must conserve tires. There is another side of the story, however, which never has been published.

In addition to saving tires, the civilian economy must also save man power. If I were to drive at a snail's pace, it would take two men to do the work that I am now doing for my company.

There are one of two things that I can do. I can quit my job now and try to find other work. This would not be easy. I am middle-aged and without training to work with my hands. Or I can do as I am doing, continuing at my job supporting my family and driving faster than 40 miles an hour as long as my tires last. I can't loaf on the highways and make a living. S. T. T.

HOLE IN STREET.

Chicago, Aug. 19.—I blew out my last front tire yesterday hitting a rut in the pavement in State street. I am not qualified under rationing to buy another tire. This ends my motoring for the duration of the war. I feel like suing the city, but I suppose this would be futile. So, I am asking Mayor Kelly, please fix our streets to save other motorists' tires.

MRS. J. L. G. PUTMANN.

LIKES STOP LIGHTS.

Chicago, Aug. 19.—I want to reply to the motorists who think we have too many stop lights and stop signs. We don't have enough. Automobile operation is a luxury hangover from peacetime. This is wartime. Anything that can be done to stop automobile driving for the benefit of pedestrians and bicycle riders is for the benefit of society.

You probably won't publish this. I know that your Voice of Traffic is run for the benefit of the automobile companies and gasoline companies. Maybe you think I am prejudiced because I never owned a car? Well, you'll be a pedestrian soon and so will the rest of your readers.

MAURINE L. REIKMEYER.

A VACATIONIST RETURNS EAST.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Aug. 18.—I have just returned from a vacation in my home town, Chicago. It was like leaving a motorist's paradise to return to a motorist's hell.

It was certainly a joy to get away from the gasoline rationing in the eastern states and to be able to buy as much fuel as needed regardless of the hour. It was certainly a pain to come back to the east where every gasoline purchase must be made with a coupon from the ration book and where the stations are closed after 7 o'clock at night. Chicago motorists do not know how lucky they are. I feel sorry for them if gas rationing becomes nation-wide. C. O. S.

MARK SOUTHEAST ROUTE.

Bloomingdale, Mich., Aug. 3.—In making auto trips to Chicago from Michigan have noticed that most cars coming to your city from the southeast over Indianapolis boulevard turn north on Avenue L, joining the congested traffic of that street going under viaducts and thru many twists and turns to reach the Outer drive. Have wondered why adequate signs have not been placed near intersection of Indianapolis boulevard and 100th street, directing travel over 100th street which has one turn in it until you are in Jackson park. It seems to be well paved and lighted at night. C. L. HOLMES.

CHICAGO BUSES CLAIM TO LEAD IN TIRE SAVING

BY HAL FOUST.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22.—The Chicago Motor Coach company this week cited records of the Office of Defense Transportation in support of its claim of national leadership in measures to reduce tire wear.

Among these measures, according to the Chicago company's president, Benjamin Weintraub, is included daytime parking of buses near the central business district. The vehicles so parked are used in rush hours, bringing workers to their jobs in the morning and from their jobs to their homes in the evening.

"In the loop area," said Mr. Weintraub, "we are at present parking 43 per cent of all buses operated, saving 4 million 200 thousand tire miles."

One of the First.

The ODT records show that the Chicago Motor Coach company was one of the first in the country to rearrange its operations to meet the rubber crisis that followed the Pearl Harbor attack. Other items of leadership according to Mr. Weintraub include the following:

1. Operation of complete fleet of buses specially designed by its own engineering staff and built in its own shops.

2. Adoption of use of pneumatic tires.

3. Introduction of first streamlined bus equipped with rubber cushioned upholstered seats and with special magnified lighting, both of which were later installed in all streamlined trains, including the 20th Century and Broadway Limited.

Automatic Transmission.

4. Use of automatic transmission [1935] which has since been adopted by most of the passenger car manufacturers.

5. Installation of extensive use of Diesel engines in its urban buses, thereby saving millions of gallons of gasoline so essential to the war effort [63 per cent of its operation is now conducted with Diesel powered coaches].

6. Granting of free rides to members of the armed forces by a private transportation company.

7. Coöperation with the treasury department in the distribution of war bonds and savings stamps literature.

8. Coöperation with the treasury department by placing in daily service the first specially painted war bond bus.

NEWS AND VIEWS

The plant of the Oldsmobile division of General Motors at Lansing is flying proudly a production award flag given it by the army and navy for high achievement in the production of war equipment for the nation. In addition to flying a flag over the plant, each worker was given a lapel pin as a mark of his contribution to the war effort.

S. E. Skinner, vice president of the General Motors corporation and general manager of Oldsmobile, gave full credit to the men and women of the Oldsmobile organization for the award.

"In their desire to aid the cause of America and to hasten victory," Skinner said, "Oldsmobile men and women exerted every effort to increase arms production. They having willingly worked harder, sacrificed many personal pleasures, and have answered patriotically the call for more and more production."

More miles have been put on tires since the public was warned to go easy on their car driving. So the B. F. Goodrich company is giving some pointed advice to motorists. Take it slow and easy, and protect your life as well as the lives of others to say nothing of husbanding the mileage in your tires, the company warns.

Suppose your car will do a mile a minute, but one or more of your tires has become well worn, perhaps the treads even destroyed by wear. Forget that speed, keep under the 40 miles an hour limit placed by the government, and drive slowly.

Tires are engineered to be safe at the high speeds of which the modern automobile is capable, unless something unpredictable occurs. But as the rolling miles wear a tire down beyond a certain point the factor of safety at high speeds declines. If the car is driven slowly many miles may remain in the tires, but driven at high speed the tires become a hazard. So take it easy.

The Illinois Automobile club makes the following suggestions designed to assist in the safe operation of automobiles used in group riding:

Definite schedules should be arranged to avoid speeding, which not only is dangerous but is hard on cars, tires, drivers, and passengers. Overloading should be avoided and passengers should enter and leave a vehicle only from the curb side. Passengers should do nothing to distract the driver's attention. Brakes should be kept in proper adjustment. All traffic signals and signs should be strictly obeyed.

OUR WOMEN'S ARMY GETS UNDER WAY

By MARCIA WINN

Fort Des Moines, Ia.

FIVE WEEKS ago tomorrow 784 women moved into this historic old cavalry fort which for 99 years has known only the tramp of men and horses.

Newsreels recorded the event for the motion picture screens of America. Hundreds of correspondents and photographers milled about. Radio commentators chronicled each move, and an extraordinarily pretty young woman from Texas, with the emblem of Pallas Athene, goddess of wisdom and victory, on her khaki lapels and the silver eagles of a United States army colonel on her shoulders, walked to a microphone to say to the women of England and China by short wave:

"This is July 20 in America. Today I have met, as their director, the first unit of the women's army auxiliary corps at Fort Des Moines. This is the beginning of an American women's army that will serve in noncombat duties at home and abroad with the army of the United States.

"Today the women's army auxiliary corps goes into uniform. Today it goes into service with the army of the United States. Today the first unit of officer candidates took the oath of service—the first of an estimated 150,000 American women who will volunteer."

The khaki-clad young woman, 37 and the mother of two children, was Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, director of the WAAC, the first unit of which she was then seeing for the first time.

The 784 girls and women who were there were a picked crew. They had survived stringent physical examinations, mental tests, and character analyses to attain their goal—the first American women to serve with the army of their country. They were the forerunners of thousands to come, and to come at so rapid a rate that by Dec. 7, the first anniversary of the attack on Pearl Harbor, this post will house 7,000 at a time.

Of the 784, 340 were basic auxiliaries, or privates, who will be attached permanently to Fort Des Moines, and 444 were candidates for officers in the new corps, here for eight weeks' intensive training which will enable them in turn to train others. Already their ranks have been augmented by 533.

The 784 on opening day were a shining cross section of the American woman. They were clean-cut, alert, intelligent, capable, athletic, well groomed, and wholly personable.

They were a cross section of America, for they came from every state in the Union. One was a Mexican who had enlisted from Arizona. One was a Czecho-Slovakian who had enlisted from California. Forty were members of the Negro race, precursors of a large Negro group to come. They came from the sands of Florida and the ranges of Montana, from the rocks of Maine and the sugar fields of Louisiana, the clipped speech of New England mingling with the milk and honey of Georgia and the broad crispness of the great plains.

They came from every walk of life. One had been a deputy sheriff in Los (Continued on page seven.)

WHEN APARTMENTS WERE YOUNG—THE STORY OF A CHICAGO LANDMARK

● This article was awarded first prize as the best newspaper story on early Chicago by the third annual writers' conference, held recently in Evanston. The author's column, "When Chicago Was Young," is a regular feature of The Sunday Tribune.

By HERMA CLARK

THE State street car clangs its way noisily across Chicago avenue, passes the intersection of Superior street, where the Holy Name cathedral and the Salvation Army headquarters face one another; speeds past Huron and Erie streets, and approaches Ontario street.

Here, at the southwest corner of State and Ontario streets, stands a brick building whose many iron balconies, shaped somewhat like the dashboard of an old-fashioned sleigh, attract the eye. A sign proclaims it THE ONTARIO HOTEL.

The whole building has an air of gentility. When it boasts a new coat of paint one is reminded of an elderly grand dame rouging her cheeks. You admire her spirit. You admit that she looks spry. Yet you have a suspicion as to her age.

What is the Ontario's story? Was it always a hotel? Who built it? Who lived in it when it was new? Was it a "swell" place? What was the neighborhood like in its youth? These are some of the questions that rise in the mind of one who is given to speculating on the story of our city.

Was it always a hotel? No. It began life as an apartment house. Was it the first of such buildings in Chicago? No. One at least antedated it. The first apartment building, or what is supposed to have been the first one erected here, still stands at 26 West Erie street and is occupied by employés of the Passavant hospital. This Erie street building was put up by Mrs. Caroline Brown, who, widowed, had taken her children abroad for their education and had lived in an apartment in Germany. On her return to Chicago Mrs. Brown built the three-story building on Erie street near Dearborn street, and for some time it was an object of curiosity to Chicago citizens. Mrs. Brown, one of the most progressive women our city has ever known, was the founder of the Chicago Woman's club, and, as the club was in need of funds, she used to earn a small sum for its treasury by showing visitors thru her building at 10 cents a head.

This building, 26 West Erie street, was erected about 1875, says Mrs. Brown's son, Kenneth Brown, 1117 North Dearborn street, who as a child lived in one of the apartments. Thus it was five years old when the Ontario, at State and Ontario streets, was begun.

By 1880 New York had approved such living quarters and they had been shown to fill a real need. Still conservative people looked on somewhat doubtfully as the red brick walls of the new Ontario apartment building rose in the midst of a neighborhood of solid houses occupied by equally solid citizens.

Of substantial construction, the old building has lasted for 62 years and today stands sturdily, regarding the neighborhood with a surprised stare.

It was a very different view that these windows commanded in the elegant eighties. Then it was almost a suburban community. Indeed, a wit who lived in the building maintained that it was really in the country, for in the next block were to be found both Fields and Trees. (Henry Field, brother of the first Marshall Field, lived on the north side of Ontario street near State street, while Judge Lambert Tree, whose son Arthur later married Ethel Field, occupied a baronial castle at Cass and Ontario streets, his grounds extending to Ohio street on the south, with beautifully kept lawn and flower beds. Cass street is now called North Wabash avenue, and the Tree grounds are today occupied by the Medinah Temple.)

What is now known as the Studio building, inhabited by many of Chicago's best known artists and standing on State street between Ohio and Ontario streets, was not built so early. On the ground where the Studio building stands was an open space where young Arthur Tree trained his horses, affording entertainment to the dwellers in the Ontario apartments across the way.

Besides the Trees and the Fields there were other neighbors with less sylvan patronymics: Joseph Medill, editor of The Chicago Tribune, whose massive brownstone residence occupied the northeast corner of Cass and Ontario streets; Henry J. Willing, who, beginning life as a poor boy, had become a partner of Marshall Field and lived in a gray stone house at the northwest corner of Rush and Ontario streets (now a parking lot); his father-in-law, Judge Mark Skinner, Chicago pioneer and friend of Lincoln, who lived where the Croydon hotel now stands, and W. F. McLaughlin, whose red brick house, still standing, occupies the southeast corner of Rush and Ontario streets.

Yes, a fine neighborhood it was, and altho only nine years had passed since the great fire of 1871, traces of that catastrophe were fast being obliterated.

What did Chicago of the eighties look like? The city is vividly described by a titled Englishwoman, Lady Duffus Hardy, who traveled in America in 1879 and 1880. Quoted by Bessie L. Pierce in her valuable book, "As Others See Chicago" (University of Chicago Press), Lady Hardy writes:

"Knowing of the fiery scourge which a few years ago had marred and scarred the beauty of that fair city, we expected to find traces of ugliness and deformity everywhere—crippled buildings and lame, limping streets running along in a forlorn, crooked condition. . . . But, Phoenixlike, the city has risen up out of its own ashes grander and statelier than ever. . . . The business streets are lined with handsome, massive houses six or seven stories high, substantially built, sometimes of red brick, with stone copings and elaborate carvings, while others are built of that creamy stone which reminds one of the Paris boulevards."

Lady Hardy speaks of the waterworks being at "the northern end of the city," and she thinks she never saw "so many cupolas, buttresses, pinnacles, and towers" grouped together on one spot. She is generous enough to call the architect a true artist who has produced from a combination of opposite forms an imposing effect. Lincoln park, she thinks, gives promise of being a delightful promenade and recreation ground, but she says it is only a park in embryo, tho it is growing rapidly.

What would the titled English lady think if she could see Lincoln park today, with its hundreds of acres snatched from Lake Michigan? Lady Hardy was kinder to us than was Oscar Wilde, who lectured here in 1882 and was entertained by members of Chicago society, only to hurl a poisoned dart at them by referring to our famous water tower as a "castelated monstrosity." Chicago never forgave the esthetic Oscar for that unkind cut.

With such opulent neighbors and with the park in easy driving distance, what wonder that the brides of the period cherished an ambition to go to housekeeping in the Ontario, handsomest of apartment buildings?

The Ontario was put up by Simeon B. Williams, a New Englander originally, who had lived in Cincinnati before coming west and settling in Lake Forest. Desiring a good place to stay when he came into the city with his family for the winter, he decided to build an apartment house. A man of means, integrity, and refinement, Mr. Williams saw to it that the best materials and workmanship were put into the building. The result was the Ontario, gazed at by visitors in awed silence for its great size and its new ideas.

Mr. Williams, benign and patriarchal in aspect, with his black velvet skullcap and long white beard, was the kindest of landlords. When the inexperienced young brides who were his earliest tenants called on him in despair over a leaky faucet or a squeaking door hinge he was as distressed as they were, responding quickly to the call and bending with anxiety over the offending object.

Tho he was beloved by his tenants for his concern over their troubles, it must have occurred to Mr. Williams, as it has occurred to many a landlord since then, to wonder why he had ever thought it a good idea to live in his own building.

Simeon Williams had four children—Lawrence Williams, the Misses Anna and Cora Williams, and Mrs. M. L. Scudder Jr. Only Miss Anna Williams survives. Since she left the Ontario, many years ago, she has lived at 1362 Astor street. The Williams family name is known everywhere in the Presbyterian denomination for the many benefactions of its members.

Grandchildren of the man who built the Ontario are Mrs. George A. Ranney and Lawrence Williams of Chicago and Wheeler Williams of New York. Wheeler Williams is a sculptor of distinction and designed the tablets at the north and south ends of the Michigan avenue bridge, honoring the exploits of Marquette and Joliet, La Salle and Tonty.

Among the first to move into the Ontario was Samuel J. Medill, brother of the better known Joseph. Ohio-born Samuel Medill had given two years' service to the Union army, had been discharged on account of illness, had spent a year at Beloit college, and then had come to Chicago. Here he worked on The Tribune, first in the "sporting department," as it was called, later as city editor and still later as managing editor. In 1880, the year he married and set up housekeeping in the Ontario, he was president of the flourishing Chicago Press club. When he left Chicago in 1882 because of serious illness, which resulted in his early death, his apartment was taken over by young Mr. and Mrs. Edward T. Blair, who were married that year. The Blairs did not live long at the Ontario, but bought a house at the northeast corner of Cass and Superior streets.

Robert S. McCormick, who was a brother of Mrs. Edward T. Blair and who had married Miss Katherine Medill, was another early tenant of the famous Ontario apartment building. Mr. McCormick was a son of William S. McCormick and a nephew of the first Cyrus H. McCormick. He entered the diplomatic service of the United States and was successively ambassador to Austria, Russia, and France. The Robert S. McCormicks were parents of the late Senator Medill McCormick and of Col. Robert R. McCormick, publisher of The Chicago Tribune.

Another early tenant was M. L. Scudder Jr., a son-in-law of Simeon Williams. His wife, the former Clarine Williams, had helped design some features of the apartments, since she had lived abroad and had seen arrangements there. Mr. Scudder, author of three books on economic subjects listed in the Chicago public library, was father of the late Lawrence Scudder of Lake Forest.

Still another tenant who should be mentioned was Mrs. C. B. Lawrence, who founded the Illinois Training School for Nurses, which was later (1926) merged with the University of Chicago. Mrs. Lawrence was one of the most useful citizens of the Chicago of the eighties. Beautiful, devoted to philanthropy, she piloted the young training school thru the difficult period of its pioneer days.

the eighties, designed the Ontario. Frederick L. Foltz of this firm planned many north side residences, conspicuous among them the great red brick mansion (now numbered 120 East Pearson street) of the late United States Senator Charles B. Farwell. This interesting old house still stands. Another building designed by Mr. Foltz is 100 East Chicago avenue, whose apartments have housed many well known Chicagoans. Miss Frieda Foltz of Chicago is a daughter of Architect Foltz of the eighties, who designed the Ontario.

The Ontario was so arranged by its builder that it could be converted into a hotel if desired, and when in 1893 the World's Columbian exposition brought crowds to the city this change was made. Since that date it has been known as the Ontario hotel.

Almost every room in the building as it stands today boasts a fireplace, many of whose mantels are of marble. Unfortunately, most of these marble mantels have been covered with numerous layers of paint. Other fireplaces in the hotel are of wood, decorated in the manner of the eighties with tile plaques, whose designs are taken from Aesop's Fables or the Arthurian legends.

From the first the building was equipped with steam heat, which was then something of a rarity, and one of the curiosities of the place is a strangely shaped radiator in one of the bedrooms. The handle regulating the heat in this old-fashioned radiator is placed at the top and looks odd to modern eyes, but it is said to do its work as well as those of the latest design.

Tho the Ontario, when built in 1880, was up to date, Miss Anna Williams recalls that at first there was only one telephone in the building and that was in the janitor's room in the basement. The commodious attic was used for storing the tenants' trunks.

Inside blinds and stained glass are two sure indications of the age of the Ontario, but its substantial construction makes it still entirely usable.

The Ontario hotel kept to the "American plan" long after other hostelries had adopted the European idea of a separate charge for room and board, and in the dining room, which was in the north end of the building, the hotel residents dined in state, many of them in formal evening dress, so says tradition. The dining room of the present day has had many vicissitudes. As this is written it has been converted into the hotel lobby, with a lunch counter at the west side, while a small dining room opens from it. Only a few years ago the kitchen was still equipped with the original kettles of an earlier day—great black saucepans in which omelettes for the great of yesterday must have been concocted, and enormous soup kettles in which must have simmered savory potage. But these have now been done away with.

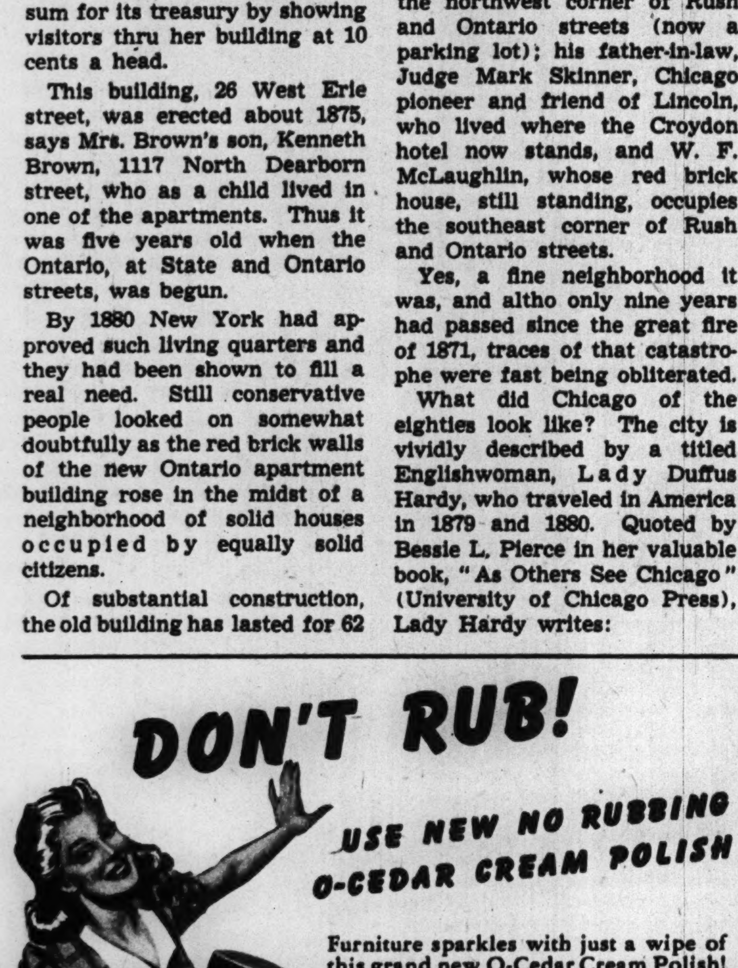
There have been rumors that the building is to be torn down. The wrought iron canopy above the State street entrance had to be removed recently owing to subway construction, but the old hotel is now so well filled that its owners will probably think long before razing it.

In the Ontario today there are guests who from a financial standpoint could live anywhere they chose. But they cling to the spacious rooms which they have occupied for years, the convenience of the location and the size of the rooms atoning for a lack of some advantages possessed by more modern buildings.

• • •

The noisy street cars clang their way past the old building, which looks prosaic enough at high noon. But in the dead of night, when for an hour the city drowses, it is easy to fancy that fair ladies in wasp-waisted, bustled gowns step out on the iron balconies and wave to ghostly guests departing in victorias driven by cockaded coachmen, while the smart click of horses' hoofs resounds along Ontario street.

From out the balcony you lean,
Your white hand waves a last farewell;
The gaslight shows a face serene.
Who may you be, O phantom belle?



DISTINGUISHED AMERICANS

ANDREW PICKENS, military leader of the Revolutionary war, was born near Paxtang, Pa., Sept. 19, 1739. While still a boy he moved with his parents to Waxhaw Creek, S. C., and in 1761, at the age of 22, he enlisted in an expedition against the Cherokee Indians.

At the outbreak of the revolution he was living in the region of Long Cave Creek, S. C., a farmer and justice of the peace. He entered military service at once and as a captain of militia fought at Ninety-six fort in November, 1775. During the following two years he saw frontier service that brought about his promotion to colonel.

After the American surrender of Charleston in 1780 he turned over a fort near by under his command and returned to his home under parole, pledged to take no further part in the war. When his farm was plundered by the enemy, however, he considered himself no longer bound by the terms of his parole. He immediately took up the sword again. For his valor and leadership at the battle of Cowpens he was presented with a sword by congress and elevated to brigadier general by his state.

Andw. Pickens

Active in the seizure of Augusta, he coöperated with Gen. Nathanael Greene's troops in the unsuccessful action at Ninety-six and in the battle of Eutaw Springs. In the last-named engagement he was wounded. He was occupied thereafter mainly in the campaign against the Indians.

From 1782 to 1793 Pickens served in the South Carolina state assembly and from 1793 to 1795 in the national house of representatives. In the meantime the state legislature had voted him a medal for his distinguished service in the revolution and had appointed him major general of militia.

Off and on for several years until 1801 he represented the federal government in negotiations with the Indians, and for six months in 1797 he was engaged in marking treaty boundaries.

For a number of years he lived at Hopewell, his estate in Oconee. Later, however, he settled in Tomassee, where he dwelt in retirement, except for a short time during the War of 1812, until his death on Aug. 11, 1817.

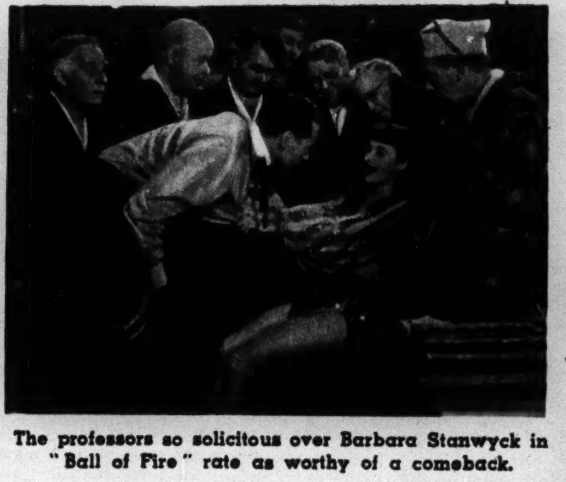
Hark! TO THE CALL OF THE CUSTOMERS

Claudette Colbert in "Skylark." Agreeable, but where was the dramatic sequence? a fan asks.



The professors so solicitous over Barbara Stanwyck in "Ball of Fire" rate as worthy of a comeback.

"Why not a remake of 'Street Scene,' with ESTELLE TAYLOR again?"

ONE SUBJECT our biggest bigwigs never get tired of is, "What's wrong with the movies?" They all have their own pet ideas, and they'll hold forth in offices, at parties, on golf courses and tennis courts. The only thing I know of that shuts 'em up is gin rummy. But nobody ever thinks of listening to anybody else's idea.

Now, in any other industry a manufacturer tries to turn out a product that his customers like. O, sure, they try to make the customer like what they turn out, too. But when it's improvement they're after they listen to the customers. Motion pictures (correct me if I'm wrong) are made for the moviegoing public. But how closely are motion picture producers in touch with the moviegoing public? Not at all, I can tell you. And I know, because a lot of those people write to me instead of to the producers when they get something on their minds, knowing very well if they wrote to the latter their letters would land in the waste basket.

Well, I've always thought the fans were worth listening to, and many of their ideas are darned good. For instance, here's V. A. Robertson with an intelligent analysis of what he thinks is wrong with many pictures:

"I didn't come here to carp nor to shoot off my big mouth. I am a moviegoer, anxious to be amused, ready to pay the movies handsomely if they will amuse me. The other night I saw 'All That Money Can Buy,' a dandy show, fine acting, good characterization. I noted weakness in dramatic structure, but I don't squawk about that. I liked it plenty. On the same bill was 'Skylark.' The main lady was Claudette Colbert, an agreeable person. The men were good looking and competent. The picturization was fine.

"Now for the show itself—it was rotten beyond your wildest dreams. There was hardly a sequence that had relation to any other sequence. From the remarks around me I judge that I made it unanimous. That experience will keep me away from the movies for about two months.

"In prehistoric times it was discovered that people responded excitedly to a theatrical performance if the events were strung together in certain sequence. The same events in different sequence left the audience cold. And it didn't matter how exciting the events might be. They had to follow a certain pattern or the boys and girls threw tomatoes. This phenomenon was observed and analyzed. From these many researches evolved a thing called dramatic structure. What I want to know is: Has no Hollywood producer heard about this? And they needn't come back at me by saying, 'What does a 12-year-old mentality know about dramatic structure? My reply to the above question is a hearty sneer and 'Brother, the 12-year-old mentality made dramatic structure by applauding to beat hell when it was put before them.'"

Lloyd Nolan

Mr. Robertson, I think you've got something there. Any little commodity that's made a hit with the customers as long as dramatic structure has is worth a little looking into—and thanks for speaking.

• • •

Mrs. Lucian Smith of Hadlock, Wash., speaks up for the average moviegoer:

"Miss Hopper, I often wonder how many stars really understand how much the movies mean to us who lead ordinary everyday lives. When my husband and I go to a show, which is once a week, I sit there and live, really live each moment as if it were an event in my own life. I know the birth dates of my favorites, and I study their horoscopes, likes and dislikes, read the fan magazines every month about how they live, etc. I like to imagine how they face each crisis in their lives, how they rise above their sorrows. Whether they profit by the bitterness or gladness of their experiences. . . . Now for a few of my hopes. I would love to see Ida Lupino portray a really great part. She has what it takes to be another Bette Davis, in my opinion. . . . Lloyd Nolan is a star we both admire and would like to see him in a picture worthy of his talents."

I hope you get both those wishes, Mrs. Smith.

A. L. Galt of Oklahoma City suggests:

"As thoroly as we realize our own ignorance of the picture business, we still would like to suggest the future use of the professors of 'Ball of Fire.' We don't know with whom to place our vote, but hope you don't mind being so treated. In a mystery or in a musical comedy they would be tops."

Thomas Mitchell

I'm with you, Mr. Galt. They'd be a riot. Let's say it with music for the old professors and give 'em another fling.

John Peter Windsor of Honolulu writes:

"Why not a remake of 'Street Scene' with Estelle Taylor again, who looked wonderful the day I left Hollywood? And gas masks and helmets by Kenneth Hopkins."

Every now and then our producers begin tearing their hair because they can't find original stories. Some time ago Dr. Hugh Heaton wrote me about a man whose life he would like to see on the screen, and so would I. It could be made no end amusing, with adventure, humor, history, and Americana blended into a priceless story. Here is what Dr. Heaton wrote:

"My particular reason for writing you is to tell you of a man I once knew whose career had at least one episode that would fit into or be the basic theme for one of those films of Americana. He was, when I knew him, Capt. Mathias M. Day, U. S. A., and the military instructor in a fresh-water college (Mount Union college, Alliance, O.), but had been a chief of Indian scouts during the Geronimo and, I think, Apache Kid campaigns. To me the deeds of Captain Day far outshone those of other army men of that time, but I have never seen even his name mentioned.

"This was his deed: As chief of scouts he took his detail of 30 or 40 Indian warriors out into the mountains 'beating the bushes' for Geronimo and his band, and was gone for over a year. He was the only white man among those Indians, and many of his Indians were blood relatives of Geronimo's band. During this time he did not communicate with superiors nor draw any help or supplies from them. As you would see, there was not a minute of all that time that he was not in extreme danger by all ordinary standards. This unremitting trailing of the enemy Indians was what forced Geronimo to come in and surrender to Colonel Lawton.

"I think army records will confirm my story, and of course in Hollywood there are those who know where to look for them. . . . He was a big, jovial type, totally lacking in false militarism, and probably did not shine in formal big post life. He was supposed to teach military drill, but as we had had a very efficient instructor preceding him, he frankly told our cadet officers that they were better qualified than he to teach the manual, and devoted his life to football—and under the guise of calisthenics taught the co-eds all the dance steps! This in a very, very strict Methodist college. When the faculty tumbled, what a row!"

Wouldn't you give your eye teeth to see Tommy Mitchell turned loose in that story? But we'll probably never have the picture. It's so much easier to sit around and yell about the dearth of story material, and buy up the best sellers, than to listen to any one with an original idea.

Well, I don't make pictures—only talk about 'em. But when good ideas like these pile up on my desk I just have to do something about it. So keep on telling Old Lady Hopper what you'd like to see on the screen, and every now and then we'll have another round table like this. At least we can have the fun of swapping ideas. And you know what that wise fellow said (I've forgotten who he was): "If I give you a dollar and you give me a dollar, each of us has only one dollar; but if I give you an idea and you give me an idea, each of us has two ideas."

GRAPHIC LITTLE THEATER

1 Carrie Bishop (Diana Barrymore) has just completed a long run in the role of Queen Victoria. "Mike," she tells her manager (Andy Devine), "I'm going home to mother—for a rest."

2 "Mother," Carrie cries, "you're more beautiful than ever!" "That, my darling and famous daughter, is because I'm in love!" replies Christine (Kay Francis).

3 Fearful that Steven Forbes, her mother's suitor, might be perturbed to find a grown daughter, Carrie dresses as a little girl, to the slight consternation of Steve (John Boles) and his friend, Jimmy Blake (Robert Cummings).

4 To add to the confusion, Carrie is discovered, during a later visit, in her grownup state, and immediately poses as her own aunt—a mean old aunt, at that. Jimmy takes an immediate dislike to her.

5 Back in her childish disguise, Carrie leads Jimmy a merry chase, into a soda fountain squabble, and finally into police court for her reckless driving. It all works out well, however.

6 Until, that is ... and Christine ... pose as her aunt

College Commandoes

● Michigan State college at East Lansing has inaugurated a physical fitness course designed to prepare students who are subject to the draft for the rigors of army life. Known as "safety skills" (or in wry student vernacular "safety kills"), the course is based on the British commando training and the physical education work now being given to army and navy men. It is the first such college course and will serve as a model for similar courses in other schools this fall.

Part of the work involves running an obstacle course. Here boys are crossing the Red Cedar river hand over hand on ropes. The river must be crossed twice.

William J. Wissman, Rochester, N. Y., does the wooden wall climb with pack.

Phil C. Goodrich, Ithaca, Mich., crawls thru the tunnel. Standards require students to cover 30 feet in 15 seconds head first, in 22 seconds feet first.

9 At a bridge Jimmy stops, asks Carrie if she can swim. When she says yes he tosses her in the river.

10 By now very much in love with Jimmy despite her ducking, Carrie goes off to rehearse for her new play, not knowing where he is. Steve promises to try to patch things up.

11 In the finale of the new play Carrie, as Joan of Arc, is interrupted in her climactic speech by the frantic actions of one of her "knights." He turns out to be Jimmy, and altho the scene is spoiled, the youngsters are happy in their reunion.

Farm Crops Offer Ways of Making Rubber

● This is the second in a series of articles about various processes of making synthetic rubber. Last week the use of waste materials from paper mills was discussed. This process involves the production of alcohol from sulphite liquor. The Tribune, thru its subsidiary, the Ontario Paper company of Thorold, Ont., has offered to finance construction of the necessary facilities and to make the process available to other paper mills. It is estimated that American and Canadian paper mills create enough sulphite liquor to produce the alcohol necessary to make 90,000 tons of synthetic rubber annually.

AMERICA'S wartime predicament in respect to rubber stems from the fact that, while it is the world's greatest consumer of rubber, it long ago permitted the control of the source of this important strategic material to pass into the hands of foreign nations. That these foreign nations are allies of the United States counts for nothing so far as rubber is concerned, now that they themselves have allowed the enemy to seize their rubber sources.

Every one recognizes the necessity of a revised program that will provide adequate rubber for our war needs and at the same time keep as many private automobiles running as possible. Every one also knows that when the country's reserve stock of crude rubber is used up there will be comparatively little more available for the duration of the war.

This means that the supply must be stretched out as far as it will go; that the restricted rubber sources of South and Central America, India, Ceylon, and Africa must be exploited fully; that other sources of natural rubber, such as guayule, must be expanded; that the synthetic rubber program must be reorganized and speeded up, and that conservation will have to be practiced to the fullest degree.

Among the men of the rubber industry there is a growing feeling that much of the success of meeting our rubber needs must depend upon our ability to produce synthetic rubber speedily.

Synthetics of high value now in production in this country include Buna-S, the excellent material of the tires of both the German and Russian war machines; Butyl, an American-developed synthetic; Neoprene, of the du Pont company; Ameripol, of the B. F. Goodrich Rubber company; Chemigum, a product of the Firestone company; Buna-N (or Perbunan); Koroseal, also of the Goodrich company; Vistanex, of Standard Oil, and Thiokol, which is produced by the Dow Chemical company. The only general purpose synthetic rubber which had been brought into commercial production in the United States by 1940 was Ameripol. Tests of tires made of this product showed them to be equal or possibly superior in durability and service to the natural rubber product.

The Germans make synthetic rubber from butadiene, a gas which they obtain from acetylene derived from coal. They bring butadiene and a liquid called styrene together in the presence of peroxide to form an improved type of synthetic rubber. In America butadiene can be obtained more cheaply from a gas called butane which is produced from crude petroleum or natural gas. (As was explained last week, butadiene can be obtained also from alcohol.) Styrene is obtainable from petroleum, or partly from alcohol.

One American way of making rubber substitutes is thru mixing butadiene with acrylonitrile. Another form of synthetic rubber is produced thru the combination of ethylene and chlorine with sodium polysulphide. Still another form is produced by bringing together butadiene and isobutene in the presence of a catalyst. Isobutene, like butadiene, is derived from petroleum.

Dr. W. H. Dow, president of the Dow Chemical company, has said that the production of Thiokol in his company's plant at Midland, Mich., would reach a point by early autumn where enough of the material would be turned out to permit the retreading of approximately a million automobile tires a month.

Tires retreaded with Thiokol, it is estimated, will have an average life of at least 5,000 miles at moderate driving speeds. One test tire already has gone about 10,000 miles. The basic raw materials of Thiokol are caustic soda, sulphur, and petroleum derivatives. The Goodyear Tire and Rubber company on June 10 announced its intention of using Thiokol for retreading tires and later for the making of whole tires.

One of the newest ways of making synthetic rubber is by distilling farm crops into butylene glycol, a fairly rare chemical, and then converting the glycol to butadiene rubber. Those who know the process best say that its prospects are very favorable.

Altho the method is not yet out of the experimental stage, one liquor manufacturer and chemist, H. F. Wilkie of Seagram Distillers corporation, claims that he already can make enough butylene glycol for 200 tons of synthetic rubber a day at a cost of only 20 cents a pound of rubber. That would mean the principal material for 70,000 tons of synthetic rubber a year from one distilling organization. With expected refinements, says Wilkie, the price could be reduced to about 15 cents a pound of synthetic rubber.

The main difference between the butylene glycol method of synthetic rubber making and the better tested alcohol method described last week is that butylene glycol replaces the alcohol in the second stage of the process. Both methods can use practically any kind of vegetable matter for distilling purposes.

Dr. Leo M. Christensen, research chemist of the University of Nebraska, explained the butylene glycol method in a statement read before the house of representatives in Washington last January, declaring that the process had already produced an excellent grade of synthetic rubber.

The butylene glycol method originated, according to Dr. Christensen, at Kansas City in August, 1939, when a group of research men met and decided to work out the best method of converting butylene glycol, which some of them had already produced by fermentation of vegetables, into butadiene, the gas which is the largest ingredient in Buna-S rubber. A program of research was formulated and shortly a laboratory scale investigation was under way. At present the largest pilot plant test of rubber making by way of butylene glycol is at Peoria, Ill., where the United States department of agriculture maintains its northern regional research laboratory.

The first step in making butylene glycol is just like making alcohol. It involves the grinding up and fermentation of starchy or sugary vegetables such as grain, corn, potatoes, and presumably sawdust or the waste product of paper mills known as sulphite liquor (which one of The Chicago Tribune's paper mills has already undertaken to convert into rubber by first distilling it into alcohol).

The fermentation of the mash will take about two days, whereupon the resulting beery solution must be evaporated to about one-third of its volume and the butylene glycol removed by extraction with some solvent such as ethyl or isopropyl—or the glycol can be obtained by distillation. According to Dr. Christensen, the yield of glycol is 45 grams per 100 grams of sugar or 50 grams of starch in the raw material.

Any distillery can easily be converted to making butlyene glycol, because the process is very similar to making alcohol, and Dr. Christensen figures that the operating cost is almost identical with that of making alcohol. The raw material cost he puts at 2 cents a pound of glycol, and the factory operation at 1½ cents a pound, "allowing amortization at 10 per cent a year." Thus he calculates that "the gross cost of the glycol should be about 3½ cents a pound." But the sale of the solid part of the mashed-up grain as a by-product would bring the net cost down to something like 2½ cents a pound of glycol, he estimates.

The butylene glycol, a thick, sweet, colorless liquid, is shipped direct from the distillery or factory to the plant where it is to be converted into the gas, butadiene. This is done by dehydration, using what is called a vapor phase catalytic process which is still in the experimental stage, with details being kept secret. There is probably little difference between the glycol to butadiene process and the alcohol to butadiene conversion described last week, however. As to the cost of this process Dr. Christensen says, "Assuming a cost of 1 cent a pound of glycol for the conversion, the butadiene will cost practically 6 cents a pound."

Dr. Christensen pointed out that laboratory scale operations showed the butadiene to be so pure that it needed no further treatment before being combined with styrene to make rubber. And the styrene, he declared, could be made largely from farm produce, as is butadiene, and would cost approximately the same. The combining of butadiene and styrene (and the making of styrene) in the final stage of synthetic rubber production was described last week.

Summing up the case for butylene glycol rubber, Dr. Christensen told the house of representatives that by his method of production "200 bushels of grain (56-pound bushels) will yield . . . practically one ton of rubber. Thus from 5 per cent of the average corn crop (2,500,000,000 bushels) can be made the average annual rubber requirement of 600,000 tons."

In January Dr. Christensen said that he thought it possible that commercial production of butylene glycol and glycol rubber could be a reality within a year. "There is more than enough raw material," he declared, "to operate the 100 plants that would be needed to make all the rubber required. About 15,000 tons of steel and 5,000 tons of copper would be required for these plants."

The polymerization tanks now being built for combining butadiene with styrene to make synthetic rubber will of course serve the purpose just as well if the butadiene is made from butylene glycol instead of alcohol or petroleum.

MOSTLY ABOUT DOGS

By BOB BECKER

SO LONG as dogs are kept as pets there will be no lack of problems facing the owners. Here are some of the typical questions (with answers) that come to our desk most any week:

I own a 5-month-old Samoyede. He's a peculiar dog, not caring for anything but fish. He refuses dog food, milk, meat, dog biscuits, etc. This worries me. He can't go on living on fish foods. Can you advise me on the care and feeding of this Samoyede?—MRS. R. K., Chicago.

Dogs sometimes develop peculiar food habits, usually due to the indulgence of their owners. We know of some that, once introduced to fresh liver, refused all other nourishing dog foods. This was because the owner would give in to the dog and rush out to buy fresh liver when the animal walked away from its food dish. Your dog will eat a nourishing dehydrated dog food, a dry meal food, biscuits, or other dog foods when he gets good and hungry! Your dog should be getting milk, a prepared dog food, a small amount of cooked vegetable, fish (occasionally), and a little meat, if you want to give it meat occasionally. When our dog gets meat it's usually boiled tripe.

Fish is all right for an occasional meal, but we hardly would recommend it as a daily food. Anyway, it's too expensive, as is fresh meat at 30 to 40 cents a pound. You will get many tips on dog feeding from "Feeding the Dog," the practical handbook published by The Chicago Tribune and sold for 30 cents by mail by the Public Service Office, 1 South Dearborn street, Chicago. This book takes up diets for more than 30 breeds of dogs. It is well illustrated and contains (besides directions on feeding dogs of all ages) tips on raising a pup.

We have a springer about 2 years old, house-broken and a good pet. Lately he has been bothered with wood ticks and lice and it seems almost impossible to rid him of these pests. He even has been clipped and dipped, but they come back. Can you suggest some method we can use to get rid of the ticks and lice?—C. N. L., Chicago.

Frankly, we're puzzled about your dog having so much trouble with ticks and lice, because it's no trick at all to kill these pests. Your dog must be reinfesting himself from his bedding. It's imperative that a dog's bedding be thoroly cleaned or even burned when severe infestations of ticks and lice develop. If the dog sleeps in a kennel, use strong antiseptics and hot water and scrub the place thoroly. Finish by applying a strong solution of rotenone that will penetrate every crack in the kennel or doghouse. Any one of the dips containing rotenone kills ticks, lice, and fleas very easily, and it is not necessary too clip the dog in order to exterminate the pests.

I have a 2-month-old Labrador retriever. I would appreciate any information on the training and raising of this pup. I expect to use him in duck hunting. Can you suggest some books I should read on training?—W. O. METZ, Burlington, Ia.

Unless you have several hours a day to devote to your dog later on, a big field, and a supply of live ducks and pigeons, we're afraid you will have a pretty hard time training your dog to handle game. Training is a real science and takes knowledge of a system and lots of time and patience. We do not know of any book on raising and training Labradors for field work. But you will get some help from "Elias Vail Trains Gun Dogs," which was published several years ago. If you can talk with a professional trainer near you, by all means do so.

I own a Yorkshire terrier. Will you tell me where this breed originated?—MRS. CHARLOTTE S., Hammond, Ind.

The Yorkshire terrier, a toy breed, originated in Lancashire and Yorkshire, England. It is thought to be a descendant of the Skye terrier.

Would you give me some information on the Shetland sheep dog? How about their size, disposition, etc.?—G. E. H., Decatur, Ill.

The Shetland sheep dog should stand not less than 12 inches nor more than 15 inches at the shoulder. The breed is a collie in miniature. It is quick to learn, eager to please, and vigilant around a home. The Shetland also is affectionate and docile, so it makes a nice dog in the home.

Richard Schwantz isn't yet a veteran dog owner, but already he has learned the importance which daily brushing plays in keeping the coats of long-haired dogs sleek and well groomed. A collie is the subject of his attention. (Max Kolin photo.)

Angeles. Another was a member of the Ohio legislature. A third had been a polo pony trainer on her father's 640,000-acre ranch in Arizona. One had a Ph. D. from the University of Prague. One was a research chemist. One had been a sociologist, one a physiotherapist with the AEF in France in 1917.

Several gave up $20,000-a-year jobs to enroll in this women's corps which so thoroly revolutionizes all military tradition of the past. Others had been typists, bookkeepers, school teachers, telephone operators, instructors in physical education, housewives, and volunteer workers in the aircraft warning service along the east and west coasts.

One out of every five of these women was there because a male member of her family was or had been in the armed forces. Two were navy brides, widowed at Pearl Harbor and Midway. One was an army widow, widowed at Bataan. The husband of another was taken prisoner at Bataan by the Japanese.

One, a young woman of 21, enlisted after her husband, a lieutenant with the army engineers, was drowned in maneuvers in British Columbia the same day their only child, a baby girl, died. One was a mother with three sons in the service. Many had brothers and fiancés in the services. One, Anne Eloise Sweeney of San Francisco, is the daughter of a major general and the sister of Lieut. Col. Walter Sweeney Jr., who led the first American aerial squadron into action against the Japanese at Midway.

All were there determined to do all in their power to help realize the sole objective of the WAAC—to take over 62 noncombat tasks now performed by soldiers and thereby release them for active fighting duty.

It is a strange thing for the army of the United States to say, "We want women," but this, too, has come to pass.

Eighty-one years ago, 18 years after Fort Des Moines had been created, a tiny frontier outpost against the Indians, a woman from Galena, Ill., had to disguise herself as a man and enlist in the Union forces as a soldier in order to accompany her husband, an army surgeon, as nurse.

That was in 1861. Today the army of the United States is asking for 75,000 women volunteers—women to serve with the army rather than in it, but women of uncommon courage, prepared to work with the army wherever the hazards of war may send it. Eventually the corps may contain 150,000 women or more, but at present its forces are restricted to half that number.

Is the WAAC actually needed?

The army says it is, and badly. By June 15, a month after the Rogers bill creating the women's army had passed congress, army corps area commanders had filed requests with the war department for 80,000 women. They want them as quickly as possible, to serve as stenographers, printers, cooks, decoders, dispatchers, and in 57 other capacities now filled by soldiers capable of and eager for combat duty.

THE WAACS ARE WORKING!

The WAAC is no circus or sideshow. It is no crusade. It is no feminist movement. It is a serious, immense military project. One brief tour of Fort Des Moines, with its 148 new buildings shooting up, convinces the most skeptical. Study of its rigid and rigorous schedule is even more convincing.

By April, 1943, 25,000 of these women will be with the army, releasing the equivalent of two divisions of men for fighting. By Nov. 9 they will begin moving out of here at the rate of three companies of 150 each a week, an army behind the army, to spread to 19 forts thruout the country. By Jan. 1, 20 companies will be in the field.

They drill, march, and go to classes 39 hours a week. They assimilate military tradition and customs. They weather the awkward transition from the ease and comfort and luxury of the average American woman's life to the orderly, organized, strict discipline of the army. They learn to take orders, to give orders, to obey orders, to submerge individual idiosyncrasy in the automaton's efficiency which America requires of its armies for victory.

Right now 209 army officers, headed by Col. Don C. Faith, a spare, twinkling Hoosier with the military equivalent of a Ph. D., and 1,082 enlisted men are here to train and assist the Waacs. Before the first snow flies 70 per cent of these men will be gone; the Waacs will have learned to be self-sustaining. They will have taken over most of the work being done here by men.

A Waac's day is no fun. A bugle call awakens her at 5:45 a. m. A bugle call sounds lights out at 11 p. m. In between she is one of the busiest, most industrious women in America. A typical day in the training of an officer candidate follows this schedule:

5:45 a. m.—First call.
6—Reveille and march.
6:05—Assembly.
6:35—Mess call.
7—Sick call.
7:20—First call for school.
7:30—Assembly.
7:30-7:55—Close order drill.
8:05-8:50—Calisthenics.
9-9:45—Aircraft identification.
10:05-10:50—Use of civilian and military maps.
11-11:45—Practice in use of gas mask.
11:45—Recall.
12:45 p. m.—Mess call.
1—School and drill call.
1:10—Assembly.
1:10-1:55—Lecture on methods of training.
2:05-2:50—Lecture on leadership.
3-3:45—Lecture on army and WAAC organization.
3:55-4:15—Close order drill.
4:15—Recall.
4:50—First call for retreat (firing of the sunset gun and lowering of the flag).
4:55—Assembly.
On signal—Retreat.

• • •

Mess call immediately follows retreat. The evening program begins at 7 o'clock with a two-hour study period. Tattoo, symbolizing the end of the day's work, sounds at 9, and call to quarters at 10:45. Taps is at 11.

Saturday afternoon and Sunday are the single exceptions from this daily routine.

At first classes were held on outdoor bleachers erected in the shade of the magnificent old elms which encircle the post's 25-acre sweep of emerald green parade ground. Now a row of new two-story classrooms, air-conditioned and seating 100 to a room, is used. Each contains a movie projection room where films will be shown as a short cut to military understanding wherever possible.

The first Waacs moved into the row of 11 barracks alongside the parade ground. These, built in 1903, are capacious two-story red brick affairs with white verandas, white brick bordered walks, heavy shrubs, and gay borders of flowers.

Each barrack can accommodate 110 girls, all grouped into one company. Dormitories fill the two floors with from 3 to 36 Waacs in a dormitory, all under rigid army discipline. They sleep on army cots, put their personal possessions in foot lockers beside their cots, and hang their uniforms of khaki or their fatigue dress of chocolate and white striped seersucker in standing lockers. Each girl can fasten two pictures, but no more, on the inner door of her locker.

Many changes are being made in the cavalry post to accommodate it to women. Thirty old barracks are being repaired and 65 new ones built. Five new assembly halls are going up and two new service clubs, one for Negro women, who are housed in separate barracks. The 75-bed hospital with the scroll, "We Can Lick Germany" imbedded in its concrete walk as a memento of 1917, is being enlarged to 350 beds. The old chapel is being renovated and a new one is going up. Another theater and another post exchange also are under construction.

Yet this still is insufficient. The army has been compelled to go a trifle afield into nearby Des Moines and take over three hotels and two buildings at Drake university. Here Waacs who successfully complete the rigid four weeks' basic training required of every Waac will go for additional training in the 62 special duties they will assume in the army.

The mess hall problem alone is a major endeavor. The camp opened with one, capable of feeding 400 at a time at either end of its double hall. It is gleaming and spacious, 80x65 feet to an end, with 40 long tables, 10 little stools to a table, and a shining cafeteria counter where the Waacs are served on segmented aluminum trays. Yet plans call for 18 more of identical plan.

Capt. John McSweeney, post mess officer, went thru the agonies of mythological heroes in planning menus for the Waacs. He spent weeks consulting dietitians at nearby Iowa State college at Ames to find out what women eat en masse. He discovered that they like soup, sandwiches, and salad at noon and dinner at night, so without more ado he reversed another military tradition and gave it to them. By beautiful coincidence, when the navy took over part of the Ames college its dietitians came to Captain McSweeney to ask how to feed men.

The WAAC uniform is wholly in accord with the dignity the war department hopes the corps will maintain. It is the khaki of army men, trim, neat, and beautifully tailored, with both the head of Pallas Athene, the WAAC insignia, and the cut-out insignia "US" on its lapels. With it is worn a visored, stiff-crowned hat somewhat like that of the French Foreign Legion.

Fatigue dress, which may be worn only on the reservation, is an informal military version of the traditional tennis dress, chocolate and white striped seersucker with matching bloomers. With it is worn a soft khaki hat with a stitched brim, khaki anklets, and white sneakers. The Waacs wear this for rest, for play, and when taking calisthenics under Miss Catharine Van Rensselaer, head of physical education for the corps.

Intimate details of that highly controversial subject, the Waac's lingeries, were not revealed until the WAAC camp opened. They are quite an innovation in military life, for they are of café au lait rayon jersey which just misses being khaki. Summer pajamas, all G. I. (government issue), are of lightweight coral seersucker. Each Waac also gets a delicate blue summer house coat and plum-colored moccasin slippers.

The only woman officer in the corps now is Mrs. Hobby, the director, who wears the eagles of a colonel but is addressed as "Director Hobby" or "ma'am." (Waacs, incidentally, are addressed as "Miss" or "Mrs." Jones or Smith or Stevens.) Mrs. Hobby, parliamentarian, lawyer, and newspaper executive, has headquarters in the war department in Washington, but commutes between her office and her corps.

In time she will have a phalanx of lady officers, all graduates of the WAAC officer candidate school here or auxiliaries who have risen from the ranks. These will be known as assistant directors, who will have the pay of an army captain; first officers, second officers, and third officers.

The personnel of the corps proper may have the ranks of first leader, leader, junior leader, and auxiliary (or private), familiarly known already as "auxies." Auxiliaries will be assigned ratings as specialist first, second, or third class. Their base pay will be the old pay of the army private—$21 a month.

No Waac will ever carry a weapon. She will salute army officers, and enlisted men in the army will in their turn salute her if she is a WAAC officer. She will never be in the guardhouse, but she will be confined to quarters or discharged from the service for infringements of the rigid and involved WAAC code of conduct. The army expects of her the vigor and devotion to duty of a yeoman and the demeanor of a lady, and there is no reason now to believe that she will be found wanting in either.

It is highly improbable that the Waac will ever become the heroine of this war in which the world is now engaged. Neither she nor her work is glamorous in the Hollywood interpretation of that overworked adjective. She is not in the army, but she is with it and behind it, and indubitably she will play the rôle the army asks of her quietly, inconspicuously, and well.

PERFECT POEMS

THE BUGLE

(From "The Princess")

By ALFRED LORD TENNYSON

The splendor falls on castle walls
And snowy summits old in story;
The long light shakes across the lakes,
And the wild cataract leaps in glory.
Blow, bugle, blow, set the wild echoes flying,
Blow, bugle; answer, echoes, dying, dying, dying.

O, hark, O, hear! how thin and clear,
And thinner, clearer, farther going!
O, sweet and far from cliff and scar
The horns of Elfland faintly blowing!
Blow, let us hear the purple glens replying,
Blow, bugle; answer, echoes, dying, dying, dying.

O love, they die in yon rich sky,
The faint on hill or field or river;
Our echoes roll from soul to soul,
And grow forever and forever.
Blow, bugle, blow, set the wild echoes flying,
Blow, bugle; answer, echoes, dying, dying, dying.

KNOW YOUR CAMERA

By Andrew B. Hecht, Ph. D.
Managing Editor, Popular Photography Magazine

TAKING group portraits is just about the toughest assignment any photographer can get. Making a portrait of a single model is incomparably easier than photographing several persons at the same time—not only because you must watch the pose, expression, and lighting of several models simultaneously, but also because the matter of composition enters the making of a group picture in a much more obvious way.

Whenever you have several persons in a picture, try to place them at the same distance from the camera. This will simplify focusing. Illumination on the faces should be about equally strong, or you will emphasize one subject in preference to the others.

Composing a group picture in such a manner that you do not overemphasize one subject at the expense of the others is quite a problem. It is not quite as difficult to place two or three persons in a picture as it is to handle a larger group, but in both cases you must remember that if any one of the subjects is only slightly farther removed from the camera than the others, he or she will appear considerably smaller in the picture. This disadvantage can be overcome to some extent by adding emphasis to the smaller subject with the aid of stronger illumination or by composing the group in such a manner that the eye will be guided toward the figures in the background.

When your group includes only two or three persons, try to place them in the same plane; meaning that they should be placed side by side and at the same distance from the camera. You can get variety into your pictures by raising or lowering the camera, but the instant you shoot the group from one side the figure nearest the camera will appear large, while the others farther removed will rapidly decrease in size. In some cases, of course, this may be just the effect you want.

If you deal with a larger group you will have to pose your models in several planes. Here you can counteract the effect of small background figures by moving in as closely with your camera as your lens permits and by raising the camera so that the relative distance between the lens and the nearest and farthest subjects will become smaller.

Always assuming that you want to give equal prominence to all those in the picture, you should use even illumination, or attention will be focused on the subjects which reflect the most light. For the same reason you should watch the clothes and the hair of all the subjects in the group and distribute your models in such a manner that a balanced picture results.

Photographing the full figure is more difficult, even in a single portrait, than taking a head and shoulders shot. The same is true about group pictures. It is a lot easier to make a closeup of several heads than it is to pose a full figure shot of a group. The reason for this is that it is difficult to watch the hands, arms, and legs of several persons and make sure that they are all posed gracefully. In addition, distortions are bound to result by having the arms and legs of some of the models near to the camera. If you have ever tried to take a family portrait of several persons seated on a couch you will remember that the result showed a few distant faces floating in the background above an assortment of giant legs and knees which seemed close enough to the camera to smash the lens. The remedy is to try for closeup shots of heads and shoulders, or else do an extremely careful job of posing.

The nearer you come to posing all your models in one plane the easier it is to get all of them in sharp focus. If they are posed in several planes behind each other, or if you shoot the group from one side, some of the subjects are apt to be hopelessly out of focus. You can increase the depth in the picture by closing down the lens diaphragm, but this requires the use of strong lights or long exposures.

In a formal portrait have all of your subjects look in the same direction, or the picture will give the impression of a group of people who are bored with each other. However, the models don't have to look straight at the camera.

Less formal group pictures are usually more successful, because they lack the stiffness and posedness of the formal portrait. In such pictures you can create a unified group by having all subjects looking at each other or at one of the models—for instance, the baby on grandmother's lap.

Your group pictures will look even more natural if your subjects are not merely posing for a picture but are doing something which ties them together in a group. If you snap your friends at a picnic or card game you are apt to get a pleasing group picture and will never end up with that "all dressed up and nowhere to go" impression left by most formal group portraits.

MESSAGE ON MASSAGE

By ELEANOR NANGLE

Thirty? Then devote five minutes daily to firm face massage and skin lubrication.

A PHILOSOPHY is better than anything else in wrinkle prevention, but massage does help.

Cream is necessary for lubrication, the correct movements for the muscle toning and the stepping up of circulation. You can actually give yourself some good massage every time you cream your face or even dry it with a towel. The trick lies in stroking upward, never downward, and in stroking firmly. This goes for the forehead, too. Whether you're applying cream or drying your forehead, move the hands up toward the hairline, then sideward to the temples.

When time permits use cleansing cream, wipe it off, and use lubricating cream. Stroke your face upward and outward. Then give it a pep treatment, slapping it briskly or going over it in gentle but firm little pinching movements. Slap yourself briskly beneath the chin. Work up a nice pink glow. This done, massage some more, especially around the eyes—from inner to outer corners—and the mouth. Stroke the mouth lines upward, firmly.

Then use cold water, or cold astringent, or ice wrapped in gauze, and use the cold stuff generously on the deeper lines and in the sagging area beneath the chin. The whole procedure of firm stroking and stimulating is properly blood-stirring, exactly what you need to help preserve a firm tissue foundation. The lubricating is important, too; wrinkles form fastest on the skin that is dry.

Five minutes of massage, and every waking moment to the cultivation of a philosophy—that's all there is to the preservation of the unlined brow!

YOUTH ON THE SUMMER CAMPUS

By ELEANOR NANGLE

THE CAMPUS of the University of Notre Dame presents a picture of war and peace. Mostly peace, tho. It's as tho the forces of peace, established now for a hundred years at Notre Dame, are acknowledging matter-of-factly, almost casually, the intrusion of the forces of war, but with an underlying certainty that the intrusion is a passing thing.

The indoctrination school for the V 7 apprentice seamen, now in full force on the Notre Dame campus, is a vital part of the country's war machine. It is actually the proving ground for the future officers of our navy. There are those, especially the navy men working with the fledglings there, who feel that the country's destiny rests in the hands of those 1,300 boys who pass their first rigid tests there each month and then go on, refreshed in math and completely hardened of muscle, to the midshipmen's schools. It's a big navy training center, and a grim one, but its presence leaves Notre Dame's basic serenity curiously undisturbed.

The navy has taken over four of Notre Dame's residence halls—Badin, Lyons, Howard, and Morrissey. In each what was the hall chapel serves now as a classroom for the future warriors, and it's entirely likely that nowhere in the world would you find a more striking picture of men girding for war in a setting of peace. In Morrissey's beautiful blue-walled Chapel of the Little Flower, for example, the confessionals are intact, so are the stations of the cross on the walls, and the classic stained glass windows. But desks have replaced the pews and the altar is boarded up. It's the shrine of peace become the shrine of war. The contrast is vivid, and it's painful, but somehow the assurance is also there that in God's good time the boards will come down, the vigil light will gleam again over the altar, and uniformed boys and priests and brothers will again kneel peacefully before it as they have for so many years.

This summer the navy V 7 trainees shared the campus with 2,000 of Notre Dame's own students who attended the first summer semester in the university's history. The navy men work from daylight until dusk, but for the others, too, it was a summer of hard work, with the consciousness of war participation shaping life for the students and the faculty. Five priests have already left to serve as chaplains; more than a dozen faculty members are in service; students are leaving almost daily for induction, and many of those remaining are enlisted in the various reserve classifications. Engineering laboratories and classrooms in particular were the scene of studious activity, even at night, when they are used for special courses for the industrial defense workers with which South Bend and other nearby towns are teeming.

Social activity was practically nil; there was no summer prom, and even the lawyers' ball, single social fling of the semester, was a simple dance, with formal dress optional and a student rather than a name band providing the music.

What is most striking at Notre Dame is the very lack of drama and hustle and bustle with which it accepts the change. Its transition from peacetime to wartime operation is smooth as silk, serious and efficient. As any exclusively masculine, self-sustaining, and not heavily endowed or state-supported school must, it will suffer in many ways, but one has the feeling that at its core there is the essence of the kind of peace that not even this kind of a war can destroy.

THE CHANGE OF SEASONINGS

By MARY MEADE

Try a sauce or spicy seasoning for your vegetables occasionally.

ALMOST every cook thinks of meat first in planning her meal. Vegetables she considers incidentally, and sometimes she neglects to cook them as carefully as she should.

Salt, pepper, and butter are the favorite seasonings for vegetables. Properly cooked, many vegetables need no more than these three seasoners. But now and then it is smart to sauce or spice even a perfectly cooked vegetable, just to avoid monotony in the diet and to prove to oneself that there are endless ways of preparing the same food interestingly.

Beets are wonderfully good with an orange or lemon sauce which contains a little grated peel. Hollandaise points up the flavor of any green vegetable. Tomato sauce is grand for cabbage and a tomato-cheese sauce perfect for cauliflower. Spinach cooked in brown sauce or bouillon is savory, and peas with chopped onion and mint are something to exclaim about. Parsley sauce for carrots is excellent if sharpened with lemon juice.

Chili sauce or catsup can do a lot for the very bland vegetables such as summer squash or eggplant. Dip slices of eggplant into the spicy tomato sauce, then into crumbs, before frying or broiling. And try stuffed squash this way:

STUFFED SUMMER SQUASH
(Serves four)

- 4 small summer squashes
- 6 strips crisp bacon
- ¼ cup bacon drippings
- ½ cup catsup
- 2 tablespoons water
- 1 tablespoon chopped onion
- 1 tablespoon chopped green pepper
- 1⅓ cups cooked rice

Parboil squash 10 minutes. Cut in halves and remove seeds. Salt inside lightly. Combine crumbled bacon, drippings, water, and seasonings, heat, and add rice. Fill squash. Place in baking pan with a little water in the bottom of it and bake at 375 degrees until tender.

Braised pork loin chops are an excellent meat to go with the stuffed squash if you aren't serving it as an entrée in itself. Brown the chops well on both sides, season with salt and pepper, cover, and cook very gently for about 45 minutes, or until tender, turning occasionally to cook evenly. A bay leaf may be added for a flavor change, or rub the chops lightly with garlic before cooking.

Or buy rib pork chops if you find them more economical. They are delicious cooked in just the same way. Any lean pork is a nutritious meat, rich in vitamin B1 or thiamin and containing high-quality protein.

To complete a nutritious meal based on braised pork chops and stuffed summer squash, add a mixed green salad, biscuits or rolls made of whole wheat or enriched white flour, milk, and a fresh fruit dessert, perhaps peach cobbler or chilled melon.

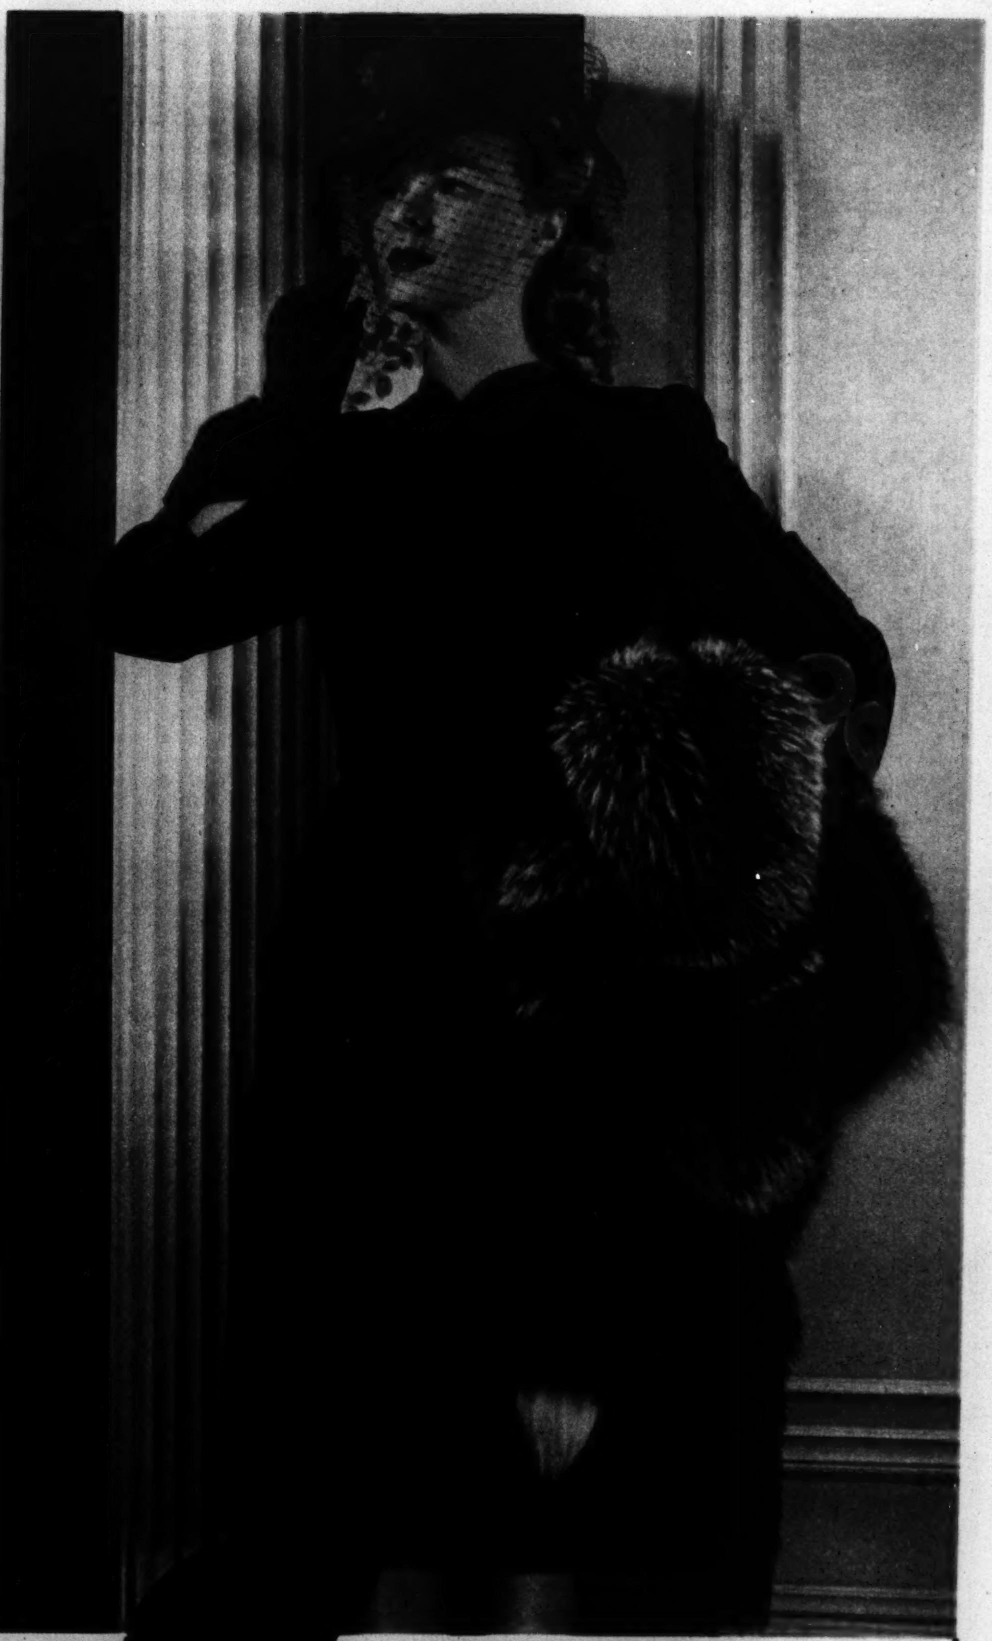
The regal gown of beige crepe at the right depends entirely upon line and workmanship for its unusual beauty. No contrasting color mars the loveliness of this costume, for the gloves and sandals are of the same shade. The designer is Donald Frist of Clinton, Ind.



Utterly simple but stunning is this dark coat dress, perfect for autumn wear with a fur scarf, and for winter wear under a fur or cloth coat. Bands and scrolls of magenta taffeta trim high neckline and three-quarter length sleeves. The felt hat and suede gloves harmonize with the taffeta. The designer is William Gebhard of New York.

Green wool, as rich in color as the finest Colombian emerald, fashions the suit at the left, with a cerise crepe blouse to make it even more spectacular. The hat, bag, and gloves also are green. The designer is Kathryn Bill of Arcadia, Cal.

There is exquisite detail in the black and red costume at left, consisting of wool dress and sleeveless wool jacket. On both the dress and jacket there are shirred bands of black grosgrain ribbon. "Thank goodness I need orange juice!"

"Imagine the doctor saying I have to drink orange juice. Why—it tastes better than anything!

"He says I need it so I'll have good bones and nice teeth ... so I'll grow big and strong ... so I won't have so many colds and things.

"Mother lets me have it between-meals too. She says it won't spoil my appetite like most sweets.

"I'm glad they feel that way. If they didn't, I guess I'd just have to yell for it!"

FOR CHILDREN AND ADULTS ALIKE, fresh orange juice is the most practical natural source of daily-needed vitamin C. Doctors will advise amounts for infants. At six years, children should have as much as grown-ups—an 8-ounce glass every day for full vitamin C benefits. Orange juice also supplies valuable quantities of vitamins A, B_1 and G, calcium and other minerals. Copyright, 1942, California Fruit Growers Exchange

100 DEGREES BELOW ZERO

THE Teenie Weenies usually knew all the latest news for quite a distance around the shoe house. Being no taller than a match, it is mighty easy for the little people to keep out of the sight of big folk. Since they can dodge into handy mouseholes or hide behind any convenient small object, they sometimes hear and see a great deal of what big folk say and do. Then, too, they often get news from the birds, squirrels, and mice.

One day the Dunce discovered there was to be a party for a little girl in the neighborhood. "They're going to have ice cream," the Dunce reported.

Other Teenie Weenies thought the same thing, but they knew that the General, who was the kindly head of the Teenie Weenie family, would not approve of their getting into big folks' things.

The Dunce faithfully watched the party all afternoon. He even saw the ice cream dished up, and he watched 12 little girls eat 12 dishes of cream, each one of which would have been quite big enough for the Dunce to coast down on a Teenie Weenie sled.

"They've put the freezer on the back porch, and I think we may be able to get some," the Dunce reported late that afternoon.

"The General won't like it," the Turk warned.

"Ah, he won't care," said the Dunce, "and besides, he doesn't need to know anything about it."

It was a very hot day and a number of the little men found it hard to resist a taste of ice cream, so they followed the Dunce to the place where the ice cream freezer stood. It was easy to climb up the handle to the top of the freezer, and there, to their great delight, they found that they could get into the ice cream. It would have been utterly impossible for such little men to lift off the heavy metal lid of the freezer, but there was a hole in the lid where the paddle came thru, and that hole was plugged with a cork.

"Some of you fellows get that cork out, and I'll go after a bucket and a long piece of string. Then one of you men can let me down thru the hole and I'll fill the bucket with ice cream," said the Dunce, and he slid down the freezer handle and quickly disappeared.

It took some hard pulling to get the bit of cork out of the hole, but the little men tugged and pulled until they finally removed it. The Dunce soon returned with the string and an acorn bucket. Tying the string about his waist, he caught up the bucket and climbed into the hole.

THE DUNCE BEGAN TO SNEEZE.

TEENIE WEENIES

BY WM. DONAHEY

"When I jerk three times on the string, you fellows pull me up," the Dunce said.

The Cook and Gogo slowly let the Dunce down into the dark freezer, but he had no sooner reached the buttom than they felt three violent jerks on the string. They quickly pulled him up, but the Dunce had left the bucket in the freezer.

He slid down the handle and in a few minutes he returned clothed in Teenie Weenie mittens, overcoats, felt boots and ear muffs. The Cowboy and the Cook let him down into the freezer and in a short time he was hauled up with the bucket heaping full of ice cream. The little chaps hurried to a shady spot and licked up the last speck of ice cream.

That evening the Dunce began to sneeze and the Doctor sent him to bed with a very bad cold.

"I don't understand where the Dunce picked up that cold on such a hot day," said the Doctor.

Several Teenie Wennies grinned, but no one said a word about the ice cream freezer.

SOUTH SIDE WORKERS SHARING RIDES

Nation's Food Pours Into Great Bins.

BY CHARLES WRIGHT.

Wheat from the summer harvest in the northwestern states soon will be stored in South Chicago elevators. Thousands of bushels already gathered by the combines are now moving toward Chicago, bread basket of the nation.

While forecasting harvests is usually difficult, Chicago grain men predict there will be littl variance from last year in the amount of grain stored in south side elevrtors this year. Principal problem imposed by the war is transportation. Most of the wheat, corn, rye, or soy beans is transported by railway. Rail facilities have become doubly taxed since the war began and American industry hit its stride.

Boat Facilities Lort.

Formerly about 10 per cent of the grain was moved by boat, now almost discounted as all available boats are carrying iron ore to the steel mills in the annual race against the ice. Grain men admit the possibility that the amount of grain passing thru the elevators may be decreased by the amount formerly carried by the boats.

Figures for the amounts of grain handled last year by Chicago elevators follow: Received, 174,965,000 bushels; shipped out, 80,123,000 bushels. The difference of 94,842,000 bushels was utilized by Chicago industries. A breakdown in rail transportation by the type of grain shows: Corn, 81,717,000 bushels; oats, 19,840,000 bushels; wheat, 18,411,000 bushels; barley, 13,823,000 bushels, and rye, 2,352,000 bushels. The legume crop of soy beans in storage was 11,541,000 bushels.

Keystone in War.

A war industry is usually pictured in terms of planes, tanks, and shells moving off the assembly line. But modern war has changed the old conception. The need for food plus the use of grain alcohol in the manufacture of explosives, has placed the grain elevators on a war footing. More than half the grain stored and cleaned by the Calumet elevator, representative of the industry, belongs to the government.

Wheat from the southeast has almost all been harvested and stored in the elevators and in many cases already is in the hands of the manufacturer. Corn from Iowa, Illinois, and Indiana will begin to pour into the chutes of the elevators in October. Some grain is brought to south side elevators by truck, especially from nearby farms in Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, and Indiana. This amount is a very small part of the total.

Vigilant Against Dust.

Speed in moving the grain from the vehicles which transport it to the elevators is the most important factor in this industry. Speed is more necessary now that freight railway cars must be kept constantly on the move in the battle of transportation.

The Calumet elevator, one of the most modern in the world and newest in Chicago, was the scene in 1939 of one of the most disastrous explosions and fires in elevator history. Nine men lost their lives. The new elevator has one of the most modern dust collecting systems. A dozen men are sweeping constantly to reduce the hazard of explosion and to prevent fire from spontaneous combustion.

As most of the grain is brought by rail the chief unloading device is the car dump, a mechanism that can unload a car of 2,000 bushels in little more than three minutes. This is faster than suction and does not damage the grain. Clamps grip the freigth car which has been rolled onto a turntable. The car tips to one side, the door is opened, and to empty it the car is tipped first on one end then on the other at a 45 degree angle. About 80 cars may be emptied in eight hours by this method.

Hoisted 211 Feet.

Within 4½ minutes the carload of grain has been whisked from the car dump to the scales at the top of the 211 foot elevator. It is then cleaned and distributed to the bins, housed in huge cylinders of concrete. It is conveyed upward on endless belts equipped with buckets.

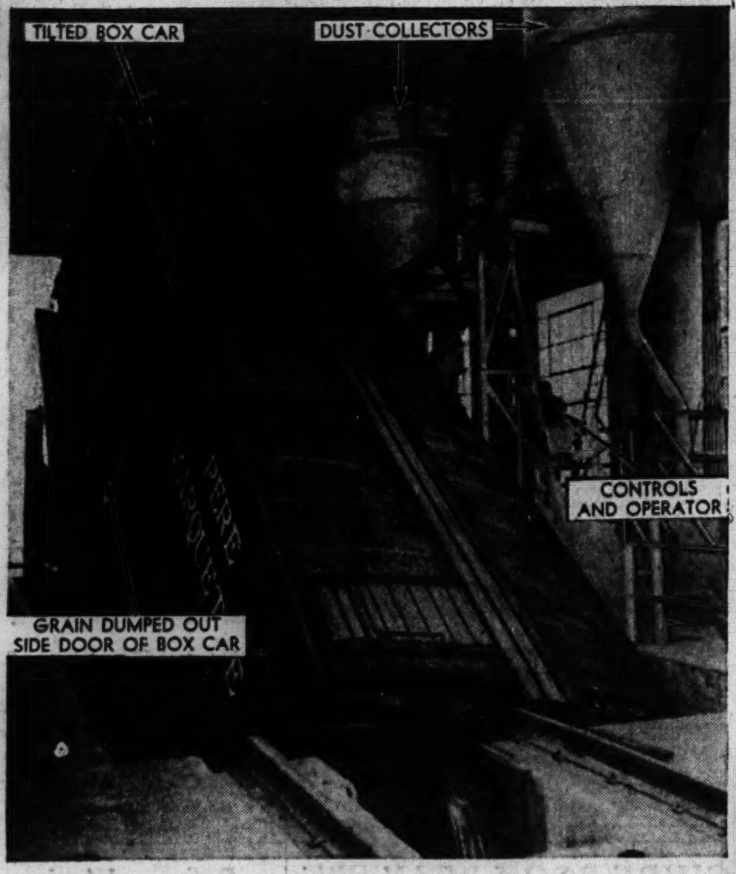
The Calumet elevator has a capacity of approximately 3,000,000 bushels. Before the grain is shipped it is sampled and tested by the Illinois grain commission. The Chicago Board of Trade keeps a weighman at all elevators.

In Family 68 Years.

Grain brought to the elevator by truck is unloaded in about the same fashion as the railway cars. The dump tips the truck upward and backward until the grain pours out. Boats can be loaded at the rate of 50,000 to 60,000 bushels per hour and unloaded at the hourly rate of 20,000. Freight cars can be loaded at almost the same rate, as the car is below the level of the storage bins.

The Calumet elevator is owned by Rosenbaum Brothers, Inc., and has been in the Rosenbaum family for 68 years. Morris Rosenbaum, founder of the company, who came to Chicago from Iowa, was president until his death in 1901. He was succeeded by Edward L. Glazer, who died in 1935. Harvey S. Austrian is now president.

How a Huge Chicago Grain Elevator Works



Thousands of bushels of grain from the summer harvest are pouring into south side grain elevators. A device that almost literally picks up a boxcar unloads all grain brought by train to the Calumet grain elevator, 3017 East 102d street. Huge clamps grip the car; a turntable tips it to one side and at the same time a projection pushes open the door of the car allowing the grain to pour into a chute. To get all the grain the turntable tilts the boxcar first on one end and then on the other at a 45 degree angle. A car of 2,000 bushels can be unloaded in little more than three minutes by this device. Victor Brickman, 8818 Exchange avenue, is at the controls of the dump.

An avalanche of grain pours from the car as soon as it is tilted and the door is pushed open. The grain drops into a chute onto a conveyor belt.

When the grain is weighed it is taken by conveyor belt to the bins for storage and cleaning. W. H. McDonald of Woodstock, general superintendent of operations, Rosenbaum Brothers, left, and W. H. Gassler, elevator superintendent, pick up samples of a new load of corn which has just arrived at the elevator.

After the grain enters the chute it passes on the conveyor belt until it reaches the elevator shaft, where cups on an endless belt lift it to the scales to be weighed. The scales are near the top of the 211 foot elevator building. The elevator weighman, J. E. Axberg of 8750 Morgan street, left, adjusts the scales while Edward F. Burke of 7826 Cornell avenue, master, Chicago Board of Trade, notes the weights. The scales have a capacity of 2,500 bushels.

The last leg of the journey of the grain thru the elevator is made by conveyor into the boxcar or boat which will take it to the manufacturer who ultimately will process it either as food or explosives for the war effort. Elwin Bristol, car loader, of 8846 Saginaw avenue, is supervising the loading of a boxcar.

Reporter Gets Sore Feet First Day.

War conditions have caused the Chicago Recreation commission to remind Chicagoans of the vacation advantages of their city. They have issued a booklet which in other times would have been intended solely for the visitor. A reporter, new to Chicago, has taken the first tour.

BY JOSEPH GREEN.

You'll have an interesting day seeing Chicago the recreation commission way. But you may have to skip the suggested route for the second day until you can recover from the first, unless you are a superman.

Probably you'll feel much better after you've had a hot bath and soaked your feet in hot water for a while and you are likely to go to bed early, even if you have decided you'll just take it easy the next day.

But for the benefit of others who plan to trust a booklet, "Vacationing in Chicago" and follow the suggested program, "Spending Seven Days in Chicago," they should spend some time hardening themselves for the job.

Morning: Take the I. C. or the elevated out to Jackson park and visit the Museum of Science and Industry.

Lunch at the museum or at International house or at the coffee shop on the University of Chicago campus.

Afternoon Program.

Afternoon: Visit the University of Chicago chapel, the Oriental institute, and other campus buildings or nearby churches of interest. Take a No. 1 bus [South Park way, west end of Washington park] north to the loop, transfer to a No. 51 and ride to Devon avenue and Broadway. Nearby are Loyola university and Mundelein college.

Dinner on the far north side.

Evening: Many motion picture theaters, dancing or swimming in this area. Back to the loop by street car, elevated or bus.

After you have trod the marble floors of the Museum of Science and Industry for a couple of hours [and you could spend a day and not see it all] you may feel you have spent enough time improving your mind for one day. You've seen some of Jackson park, with its winding, smooth driveways and the beach and lake beyond.

The scene looks inviting and you'll want to tarry, even tho you know you should be hurrying along to the University of Chicago campus, as suggested. So you'll give in to the lure of the beach, find a bench and just sit. Doing a museum is interesting, but not restful.

But the book says go, and you are going by the book. You walk to a corner restaurant and grab a sandwich and a glass of iced tea. Then doggedly, you get up and leave. You are behind schedule.

Many Races Represented.

At last you find International house. Dinner is served on a stone terrace looking into a quiet court where a fountain splashes. You see that International house really has a meaning. One of the waitresses appears to be Chinese. A woman who comes in with a curly haired Irishman might be Indian, Egyptian or Syrian, but has a pleasant manner and speaks beautiful English. There are others of various races.

You drag yourself away from the pleasant surroundings and again continue your tour of the campus, including the university chapel, the Oriental institute and other buildings, if you have time.

Sailors Parade Midway.

You walk into the chapel and startle a colored soldier and his girl sitting near the door on the back pew. Down front a blonde girl and her instructor are struggling with sharps and flats in a lesson on a big, gold harp.

It's quiet and peaceful. The church is beautiful. You go on, however, to the next stop, and even with a map ot the campus you get lost en route to the Oriental institute, only two blocks away.

You must hurry. You walk around, glance at a couple of mummies and a huge statue of King Tutankhamen of Egypt, and view a huge stone statuary bull's head recovered from Persian ruins. Then you buy a pamphlet guide of the museum for 10 cents and decide you'll come back later.

Washington park, next stop, is right over there, some one tells you. Two blocks to the east end, or perhaps three. You are supposed to walk to the west end. You do and learn that this is the Negro section of the city. You see thousands of colored citizens enjoying the park. Several hundred crowd a big swimming pool.

Then you get to the west end and

SEVERAL FIRMS ACT AHEAD OF ODT CAMPAIGN

Goal Is Average of 4 to a Car.

The "share the ride" campaign recently opened on the south side. The goal of the drive is to increase the average number of riders per automobile to at least four persons in order to lessen the wear on tires. The average now, especially in the case of cars used to take workmen to plants, is slightly less than two persons per car, according to figures at the Office of Defense Transportation.

The campaign has been opened on two fronts. South side industries are gathering data which will enable them to work out a plan with their employés to reduce the use of automobiles. The home front drive cut their use in small industries and in pleasure driving which is conducted by the civilian defense organizations.

Employés Launch Own Program.

A check of south side industries showed their employés have been organizing their own "share the ride" program to some degree for the last several months. James Errington, assistant general superintendent of the Chicago plant of the Sherwin-Williams company, 635 East 115th street, reported that many employés had been swapping rides to conserve their tires. Some, he said, had been using the plan for as long as three years.

About 50 per cent of the 1900 employés of the company use cars to get to work, Errington reported. Cards recently were distributed which will provide information in listing possible "doubling up" in the employé's driving. While all the cards have not been returned, Errington said it appeared that the office would have few adjustments to suggest as the employés have been working the plan out among themselves.

Few Cars Used at Steel Mills.

Some of the largest industries on south side are the steel mills. According to the Office of Defense Transportation, the majority of the steel workers live in the neighborhood of the plants. A short street car ride or walk gets them to work. The problem to reduce the use of rubber is not so acute.

The office listed other south side industries who have been working out the "share the ride" plan with their employés. About 100 of the 725 employés of the Eastman Kodak plant at 1727 Indiana avenue drive to work. Plant officials said about half had returned the cards which had been distributed. About 20 per cent of the employés who drive have already worked out their own group riding program, officials said.

The plan is being worked out at Harper-Wyman Manufacturing company, 8562 Vincennes avenue. There are 200 employés, about half of whom drive. Cards have been distributed, but no returns so far have been made. Approximately half the employés of the following companies drive: General Chemical, 12260 Carondolet avenue; Ford Motor company, 12600 Torrence avenue, and the Mall Tool company, 7740 South Shore drive. Total employés of these companies is about 950.

Employés Get Cards.

Cards to obtain data for working out a program have been distributed to the employés of these companies. Officials said all cards had not yet been returned, but added that in many cases group riding programs had been worked out individually among the employés.

All community offices of the OCD are beginning to get the "share the ride" program under way in their sections. Their aim is to reduce the use of tires in driving in the community, such as marketing by housewives and driving by employés of industries which employ a small number of men. Block "share the ride" wardens are to be appointed. Publicity is given to the movement thru the use of posters provided by the OCD.

Plan to Curb Speed Limit.

The project in the Kenwood community has been enlarged to include activity on behalf of the 40 mile speed limit, eliminating of all nonessential driving, and care of the car. A survey is being made to determine how many persons in the community will register to share their car. Registration cards are being sent by mail.

Harry Gaskins, community commander of Woodlawn, reported that about 60 per cent of the "share the ride" wardens in the community had been appointed. A canvass is being made of the number of cars in the community and the condition of their tires along with a survey of those who will register to share a ride. He expects the survey to be completed within three weeks.

The Parnell play yard is located at one side of a landscaped yard and is equipped with teeter totter, a swing with a safety seat, and a set of gymnasium rings. Framework supports for these are of two inch galvanized iron pipe, installed by Mr. Conroy, in concrete bases.

The contest closes Sept. 15, Mr. Hayes reminded.

NAME LENIHAN HEAD OF COUNCIL ON SOUTH SHORE

Move for Economy in Government.

R. M. Lenihan.

Mr. Lenihan succeeds John P. Quigley of 2221 East 71st street. Other officers elected are: Frank X. Rydzewski Jr., vice president; Mrs. Helen S. Babcock, treasurer, and Frederick Wilhelm, secretary.

Economy on Home Front.

All actions of the coming year, the group voted, will be based on the reduction of governmental expenditures on the home front. Lenihan reported the council was asking public officials and taxing bodies of state, city, and county governments to practice an "all-out economy on the home front so that we may win on the war front."

No money should be spent on public works, according to the council's new policy, if the project can be put off until after the war. The council will ask other civic groups thruout the city and county to coöperate.

Bus Hearing Slated.

One of the council's projects has been to get bus service on Jeffery avenue from 67th street to 95th street. A hearing before the state commerce commission on this extension is scheduled next month. In keeping with their economy policy they voted to back the extension only if it could be accomplished without taking materials which are needed in the war effort.

The council also voted support to efforts to increase diversion of water from Lake Michigan into the Calumet river which is believed will decrease pollution of water used by south side residents.

39 First Aid Grads.

GUIDE BOOK PLAN TO TOUR CITY IN 7 DAYS IS TOUGH

the first bus that comes along is No. 1. You crawl feebly aboard and drop into the nearest seat. The worst is over. Now you can ride a long way.

You expected to see something of the north side beaches, but it's too late. When the bus gets going along Michigan avenue and the Outer drive you're jammed against a wall and the aisles are full of people.

You see some of Lincoln park, but a fellow with a dirty shirt blocks the view the other way. He's one of the crowd hurrying home from work. You arrive at Devon avenue and Broadway and see towering Mundelein college and the Loyola campus beyond. You're willing to call it a day. Somehow you're willing now to forego the motion picture theaters, dancing and swimming. You hop the first bus back to the loop, heading for the rest and comfort of your home.

You know that Chicago is a big, busy city. You're aware that there are many places of interest, many facilities for recreation. You know you want to see and do dozens of things suggested in "Vacationing in Chicago."

But you'll resolve, also, to take your time about it.

SEEK VOLUNTEER AIDS FOR WORK AT SETTLEMENT

War's Demands Curtail South Side Service.

World War I. fostered an agency which grew into the South Side Settlement house. World War II. has endangered the program of this organization.

The settlement, with its headquarters in a former residence at 3201 Wabash avenue, was formed in 1918 as an agency in many ways similar to the USO. The organization then was called the South Side Soldiers' and Sailors' center, a part of the program to meet the recreational needs of service men stationed in Chicago. Such centers were located in various parts of the city.

Has Had One Leader.

Mrs. Ada McKinley, head resident, has been with the organization from the beginning. She has seen three phases of the agency's work: as a service men's center, a community center, and a settlement house. Mrs. McKinley has given her service to the organization without pay. While the settlement is in the heart of the Negro section its use is not restricted to the single racial group. It is nonsectarian.

Soon after the armistice the organization ended its function as a service men's center. The name was changed to South Side Community center. While the agency has had financial difficulties a fund was established at the beginning of the community center phase of its work from the proceeds of a pageant. The pageant depicted the progress of the Negro from the early Egyptian era to the present. This netted the center approximately $2,000.

In 1926 it was changed from a community center to a settlement house. Mrs. McKinley explained that as a community center the organization did little more than provide a meeting place for various groups in the area.

Play School and Dramatics.

The theory of a settlement, Mrs. McKinley explained, is that such an organization works with every age group of the family. The program at South Side Settlement house includes a play school for very young children of the community; organized recreation such as craft work for the 8 and 12 year old group; dramatics, clubs, and interest groups for the teen ages, and an educational program in addition to recreation for the adults.

The war has added to certain phases of work and at the same time has made it more and more difficult to obtain workers to carry out the program. Before the cut in the WPA program there were 14 workers at the settlement. Now there are four. The work of the others has been replaced by volunteer staff members, but they are increasingly more difficult to obtain.

Quakers Aid School.

When the WPA play school was discontinued this work was carried out by participants in the Quaker work camp program. When summer ends volunteers will replace them. The problem of obtaining a music director formerly furnished by the WPA is to be the work of a Negro musician, Clarence Carr.

Among other groups which will help meet the personnel problem is the Junior Achievement, Inc., an organization which enables youth under 21 to organize and operate small businesses. The Council of Social agencies is to send volunteer workers.

CHINESE SCHOOL ADDS TEACHERS FOR FALL TERM

Expects 100 Pupils in Parochial Classes.

Two teachers have been added to the staff of St. Therese school, the only Chinese parochial school in the middle west, it was announced by the Rev. John Mao, pastor of the Chinese Catholic mission. The school will open Sept. 8. Registration is scheduled for Sept. 1-3.

The school will observe its first anniversary Sept. 25. The school was founded by Father Mao and its four first graduates plan to enter high school this fall. The school offers instruction in the eight elementary grades.

Expect 100 Students.

Father Mao said it was possible that the enrollment of the school this year would be limited to 100 students. Last year there were approximately 75. Classes are held at the Chinese CYO center and the Chinese city hall.

The first year the staff was made up of two sisters from the Notre Dame parish and two lay teachers. This year two more teachers from the Notre Dame parish are to be added to the staff. Sisters from Notre Dame were also instructors in the first summer school of the Chinese parish which recently closed.

They're Avid Pupils.

The Chinese students at the summer school differed little from other students who attended schools thruout the city, Father Mao said. The possible difference was their enthusiasm. While the school was ended at noon, Father Mao reported many would return in the afternoon for another hour's work. In addition to regular instruction in elementary and high school subjects, special courses were offered in crafts, typing, music, and shorthand.

TEACHING POSTS FILLED THO WAR JOBS LURE MANY

Puffer Replaces 500 in County Schools.

Altho teachers are deserting their profession this year in favor of better wages and easier working conditions in war industries, the office of Noble J. Puffer, county superintendent of schools, is nearly done with the job of listing 6,000 instructors for the new year. Only 50 remained to be hired last week.

Stricter standards for teachers become effective Sept. 1, but the year's staff is expected to be complete before that date, so the higher standards need not apply this year, according to a spokesman in Puffer's office. Some of this year's staff will not have college degrees as required by the new rules, but may have only three years of normal school work. This eased the hiring job. Lowering standards to pre-1938 requirements of only two year normal school degrees has not been necessary.

Hire 500 New Teachers.

The inroads of war thru the draft, enlistments and industry competition are indicated by the fact that 500 new teachers had to be hired this year compared with only 381 last year.

It was emphasized, however, that no shortage of qualified candidates exists. Despite the war, the ratio of women to men teachers will remain at about 20 to 1, as last year.

Most of the remaining shortages are in rural primary schools where transportation is a major problem. Prospective teachers hesitate to use tires in school work when they can save them and get more money in other jobs, it was reported. And where rural teachers used to stay in nearby farmhouses, these rooms are no longer available.

Plan to Aid Bond Sales.

With the teacher problem nearly solved for the general opening on the day after Labor day, Puffer is looking to other problems to be brought on by war in the school year. Already plans have been made for coöperation in sale of war saving stamps, war bonds, and other patriotic activities.

To meet the war emergencies, Puffer has named an advisory committee to decide questions of school war activities.

CATHOLIC SCHOOL PLANS

New courses designed to keep students in touch with the war will be introduced in Catholic elementary and high schools Tuesday, Sept. 8, when 170,000 students return to classes. Msgr. Daniel Cunningham, superintendent of Catholic schools in the Chicago archdiocese, said that the pupils of the elementary upper grades will be given courses stressing the history of the South American countries and the Pacific islands.

Classes in home economics and home nursing will be inaugurated or expanded in Catholic girls' school here. Emphasis in the boys' high schools will be placed on mathematics, mechanical drawing, and scientific subjects.

Keep Same Schedule.

Classes will operate on the same schedule as heretofore, altho arrangements have been made to stagger the hours should it prove necessary.

Holy Redeemer school in Evergreen Park is the only new parochial school to be opened this year. St. Augustine's grammar, 5045 Laflin street, and St. Malachy's, 2248 Washington boulevard, have added secondary courses. St. Barbara's, 2859 South Throop street, will abandon its commercial designation and become a regular four year high school. St. Ann's, 1814 South Leavitt street, will start the semester as a four year coeducational high school. St. Felicitas, 1526 East 84th street, will add a two year coeducational commercial course to its program.

Enrollment Decrease Seen.

A decrease of 1,500 in grammar school enrollments is anticipated this year. The approximate enrollment is expected to be 147,591, and high school enrollments are expected to reach 29,195.

Mount Carmel, Catholic south side boys' high school, will introduce a course in aeronautics, a pretraining of aviation cadets in accordance with the army air force's suggestion. The fundamentals of aerodynamics, meteorology, navigation, and civil air rules will be taught.

HAIN IS MELODY HOUR SOLOIST ON W-G-N SATURDAY

Tenor and Marion Claire to Join in Duet.

William Hain, tenor, will be the guest Saturday on W-G-N and the Mutual network's "America Loves a Melody" program to be aired from 8 to 9 p. m. He will appear with Marion Claire, soprano star of the concert series.

Hain, who starred for five seasons with the New York Opera Comique, will offer three solo selections and sing a duet with Miss Claire. His solos will be: Lehar's "Love Is a Pilgrim," Speak's "Sylvia," and the serenade from Romberg's "Student Prince." His duet selection with Miss Claire will be Coward's "I'll See You Again."

Miss Claire will also offer three solo selections: "Say Not Love Is a Dream," by Lehar; a special arrangement of "Ave Maria," and Herbert's "Love Is Best of All" from "Princess Pat."

Musical background will be supplied by the W-G-N Symphony orchestra under the baton of Henry Weber and by the chorus directed by Robert Trendler. The orchestra will be heard playing two selections: Weinberger's "Polka" from "Schwanda," and the "Gypsy Dance" from Bizet's "Carmen."

Michael Wilkomirsky, concert master of the orchestra, will play a violin solo of Tschaikowsky's "Melodie." The chorus will sing Lehar's "Carnival" and also will be heard with the soloists.

Two of the selections, "Sylvia" and "I'll See You Again," are drawn from $25 prize winning letters written by members of the radio audience. The story behind the winners' favorite songs will be dramatized on the program.

Kenneth MacGregor, W-G-N chief of production, will be the producer and Marvin Mueller will be the announcer.

ELSON, SAVAGE IN BROADCAST OF ALL-STAR GAME

Bob Elson and Guy Savage, W-G-N veteran sports announcers, have been selected to air W-G-N and the Mutual network's exclusive broadcast of the ninth annual Chicago Bears-College All-Stars football game direct from Soldiers' field from 9 to 11:30 p. m. next Friday.

Elson, who will be broadcasting his ninth straight All-Star game, will give the play-by-play account while Savage will supply the color and background material.

The game is sponsored by Chicago Tribune Charities, Inc., with the proceeds going to the Army Emergency and Navy Relief funds. According to advance estimates, the service charities will receive approximately $160,000 as more than 100,000 persons will witness the game. This crowd will assure the All-Star event first place in sports donations for any single game.

The Bears are champions of the National Professional Football league while the All-Stars were selected in newspaper and radio polls all over the country from the ranks of last season's outstanding seniors.

Bob Zuppke, former head coach at the University of Illinois, will direct the All-Stars' squad of 62 men. His assistants will be Oregon State's Lon Steiner, Texas Aggies' Homer Norton, Northwestern's Burt Ingwersen, and Notre Dame's Frank Leahy. The Chicago Bears are piloted by George Halas, owner-coach.

KIPLEYS BOAST 87 YEAR RECORD AS FIRE FIGHTERS

Ever since Lawrence Franz Kipley became a volunteer fireman in Chicago in 1855, some member of his family has been on a fire department, including four great-grandsons who now are serving in Dolton and Riverdale.

That probably is a record, but individual members have garnered other records also. The late Peter Kipley, son of Lawrence Franz, set a record of eight seconds in the "quick bunk room hitch" event in an international competition in Chicago on Aug. 28, 1878, 64 years ago, and earned the sobriquet, "The Nation's No. 1 Fireman."

A son of Peter, Edward A. Kipley, present chief fire marshal of Riverdale, set a national record of 4 4-5 seconds in a hose coupling contest in Kewanee, Ill., in 1907. He also was champion in two succeeding contests and won a permanent trophy.

Daughter Likes Fires.

Members of the fourth generation hold no big recods yet, but Rita, a daughter of Peter F. Kipley, 9047 Muskegon avenue, shows signs of the old fire sense that has kept the family active on the fire fronts so long. She is "hot" on fires, her father said.

Of the 250 men who competed in the first tournament of the National Firemen's association in 1878, not one is believed still living, Peter F. Kipley said. One man, who recalls just how Peter Sr. won the quick bunk room hitch title, is John Clancey, 8028 South May street. Clancey was a boy at the time and jumped a fence to see the event, which thrilled him so much that he later became a fireman himself and is now a member of a retired firemen's association.

Clancey reports that visiting contestants, who came from as far as Mexico, objected but were overruled when Peter Kipley vaulted over his team of horses to save time in hitching. None of the others came close to his eight second record.

Practice for Commuters.

"It would be good practice," Kipley said, "for commuters who have trouble with their morning schedules."

The elder Peter also was quite a man on a dance floor, according to older women in the neighborhood of 24th and Canal streets, near where old engine company No. 28, with which Peter served, was quartered. But otherwise he was not noted particularly as an athlete. Twenty-fourth street was MacGregor street then.

Lawrence Franz Kipley came here from Berlin, Germany, in the early 1850s. After joining in 1855, he continued as a volunteer fire fighter until after the great fire of 1871, in which his son, Peter, had a real baptism of fire. He had become a volunteer shortly before.

Lawrence Franz felt strongly the need for fire protection even before the fire which nearly ruined the city. In his precinct he was a strong supporter of Joseph Medill, editor of THE TRIBUNE, who was elected mayor in November on a "fireproof" ticket.

Medill extended the fire department organization and Peter Kipley became a regular member of the new department in what was the outlying district near MacGregor [24th] and Canal streets.

Gold Medal Is Prized Relic.

For his quick bunk and harness performance, Peter received a large gold medal, suspended on chains from a gold name bar. This and a fireman's speaking trumpet, forerunner of present loud speaking equipment, are now prized relics owned by Peter F. Kipley.

Peter the elder continued with the Chicago fire department until 1888, when he was delegated to organize the Riverdale department.

Fire Station in Back Yard.

Afterward Peter and his three sons and two sons-in-law maintained a fire department in their own back yard, with a one horse truck supplied by the city. This continued until 1914 when paid departments displaced it. In the back yard fire department were the father and his sons, Peter F., Lawrence, and Edward, and sons-in-law, John Neering, now of Decatur, Ind., and William A. Reich, Riverdale.

Now Lawrence Jr. and his brother, Donald, are in the Dolton fire department and Edward A. Kipley Jr. is an auxiliary volunteer with the paid Riverdale department. Peter III., son of Peter F., is 19 years old, but shows little flair for fire work, his father said, with slight concern.

Peter F. was Dolton fire marshal for a two year term—1927-'28—and his brother, Lawrence, followed him in the office for two years.

After Camp Forrest Wedding

At a recent ceremony at the army chapel at Camp Forrest, Tennessee, Miss Alma Ford of 821 East 46th street became the bride of Lieut. Frank C. Conley, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Conley of Belvidere, Ill. The bridegroom is a graduate of the University of Illinois. He attended officers' training school at Fort Sill, Oklahoma. They are making their home at Camp Hood, Texas, where Lieut. Conley was recently assigned.

Early Fire Hero

Peter Kipley, said once to have been known as the nation's No. 1 firefighter, is pictured wearing the medal he won as champion in an international competition in a quick bunk room and hitch event 64 years ago. He carries what is said to have been the last fireman's amplifying trumpet used in the city. Trumpet and medal are owned by his son, Peter F. Kipley, 9047 Muskegon avenue.

PAINTING HELPS TO GIVE A HOUSE FIRE PROTECTION

Experts Find It Adds to Flame Resistance.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

There are long weeks ahead when exterior painting of a house is possible. For centuries home owners have known that paint improves the appearance of a house and protects it from attacks of fungus growth and decay, but now we also are aware that paint gives a wood house an added degree of fire protection. And the same holds true for a wood shingle roof.

We are told by paint experts who have made practical tests that a single coat of paint to the wooden walls of a house will raise its flame resistance to a definite degree. Of course some woods ignite more easily than others, but all woods are given more fire protection by paint, and while some paints put up a stiffer resistance to fire than others, all paints possess a certain ability to defy flame.

Aids Defense Plans.

Any type of fire resistance we can give to our houses now to make them safer for the duration is a gift to national defense. While we are inspecting our houses to keep them in repair for the year ahead, it would be well to check on ways to make them safer from fires.

We should examine first of all the danger spots where fires start and see if we cannot put them in better shape. These spots can be found from cellar to attic, all thru the house.

The need is imperative now to clear out all junk from the attic; all rubbish catchall piles with their rags, papers, magazines, and clothing. They are a potential menace. Spontaneous combustion has caused more fires than most people know, and even the ink in old newspapers can start a devastating fire. Moreover, if furniture must be stored in an attic it should not be jammed close to the roof, but spaced out. Remove basement junk.

Some Safety Resolutions.

Fire-retard the basement ceiling.

Make sure your heating plant isn't going to start work this fall in an ailing state. Defective heating plants are one of the biggest single causes of fires.

Have your electric wiring checked by a licensed electrician if your house is old and its wiring is not according to present standards.

Place fire-stops of incombustible material between studs in the walls at floor levels if your house is constructed with hollow spaces in the walls which run from attic to cellar.

Protect or move pipes that are too near wood. Smoke pipes should be at least 18 inches from any wood. [You may have been getting by with closer spacing for quite some time but wood, subjected to heat, gets too dry for safety after a period of months or years.]

Roof Painting Suggested.

Paint your roof if it is an old wooden shingle one and thus give it a chance to put up a fight against sparks from your own chimney of your neighbor's.

Have your chimney cleaned and checked for leaks. This should be done at least once a year. Loose bricks or cracked mortar should be replaced. If you want to do your own chimney cleaning wrap a brick in a large cloth—wrap it loosely—and then lower into chimney.

Invest in at least one fire extinquisher.

Investigate the condition of your extension cords and plugs and replace when there is a sign that insulation is worn or connections are loose.

Make some resolutions for greater fire safety around the house . . That you won't use inflammable fluids for dry cleaning. . . . That you won't smoke in bed. . . . Or leave matches where children can get them. . . That you won't leave a fire in an open fireplace or hunt for a gas leak with a match as a light or hang clothes over extension cords. . . . That you will cool an iron before you store it away and refrain from draping an electric cord on a radiator, and keep your oily rags in metal containers.

Miss Terrence to Be Soldier's Bride

Miss Marian Ruth Terrence.

At a recent dinner party at their home, Mr. and Mrs. Leo C. Terrence of 8600 Maryland avenue announced the engagement of their daughter, Marian Ruth, to First Sergt. Leonard J. Luber, the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Luber of Highland, Ill. Miss Terrence attended Hirsch High school and Wilson city college. Sergt. Luber recently was transferred from Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, to Camp Kearns, Salt Lake City, Utah, where he is with the air force. Before entering service he was in the promotion department of a condensed milk company.

This Week in the Garden

Monday, Aug. 24

Evergreen planting should be done in September as the plants require an earlier start than decidious shrubs. There is a wide variety from which to make a selection. For background use and screening the white pine, Norway spruce, and Colorado green spruce are excellent.

Tuesday, Aug. 25

Pot strawberries can be planted. They will give a small crop next season. Give privet hedges the final trimming. Plant madonna lilies as soon as they can be obtained. No more than 2 inches deep. Crocuses are excellent in the rock garden and should be planted early.

Harvest onions when the tops turn yellow, dry in the sun, and store in low boxes in a cool place. Perennials started in June and July should be transplanted to permanent quarters at this time to give them time to gain a firm start before freezing weather.

Wednesday, Aug. 26

Remove all seed formations from plants, unless the seed is wanted for propagation purposes, because much strength is required to produce it. Prepare the soil for peonies sometime before planting to allow it to settle. Make the holes deeper than the plants are to go in and use rich soil for peonies are gross feeders.

Thursday, Aug. 27

Cut out all suckers on grafted shrubs and roses. Gardeners should visit other gardens and note plants and methods that may be used and if a permanent record of garden operations is kept it will be of great reference value in future years. Try potting a lily for Christmas flowering.

An application of fertilizer around each peony plant will strengthen it for next season's bloom. The coldframe is a fine place in which to grow a fast crop of lettuce and radishes. Remove old canes from raspberries. Dig a few plants of parsley and pot them; they will supply garnishing material all winter.

Friday, Aug. 28

From now on amaryllis bulbs should be allowed to rest or become dormant. They will start into activity again during winter when they may be watered. Like all plants they require a resting period. Cut back goldenglow severely and it will flower again.

Fall plowing of land intended for vegetable growing next season should be under way. Old sod soil or weed patches that can be utilized as a garden respond very well to fall plowing, but when plowed in spring much labor is necessary to get it into condition for planting.

Saturday, Aug. 29

The calla lily is a fine plant for home use in the winow and it should be potted now. The size of the roots [rhizomes] vary from the small to those 8 inches or more in length and pots of suitable size should be used. The plants require abundant food and copious amounts of water when well established. Even when out of flower the plants are attractive.

200 BOYS TURN STEER HORNS TO OBJECTS OF ART

Ash Trays, Boats Made at Valentine Club.

In the extensive process of converting steers into beef and innumerable byproducts at the Union stockyards, the inevitable remainder is a vast pile of horns in the bonehouse.

That's where the Valentine Boys' club, 3400 Emerald avenue, comes in. Twice a year, a boys' club representative visits the bonehouse, selects a pile of horns. These are taken to the boys' club, where members of the horncraft class—mostly boys whose fathers work in the packing houses—convert them into ash trays, boats, birds, and other items for their homes.

The bulk of the horns is provided by lightweight steers, as the larger cattle are shipped without horns to prevent goring in transit. In the old days, steers used to arrive in the yards with horns with a four foot spread.

Soak in Lye Water.

At the boys' club, the first step in the conversion of the horns is cleaning and this is done by soaking the horns in lye water. After a drying of several days on the club's roof, the horns are placed in a bin in the workshop. When the boys have selected their project, they rummage in the bin until they find a horn that suits their purpose. The boys regard black horns as prizes, because they polish easily.

Horncraft is an inexpensive hobby. It requires a hacksaw, file, knife, steel wool, emery paper, a polishing compound, and an abundance of patience. The most popular example, perhaps because it is the simplest, is an ash tray.

200 Engaged in Hobby.

At the Valentine Boys' club now, there are 200 boys engaged in horncraft. Special classes are conducted by Malcom Shanower. Some of the boys reported that when they brought home the results of their work, their fathers garnered horns from the stockyards and fashioned replicas of their sons' craft.

Horncraft is an old art. In colonial times it was used extensively. The cap and powder horn was a must in the days of the muzzle loading musket. The craft has been practiced extensively in the stockyards district for the last 12 years. Stewart McKnarr, then associated with the University of Chicago Settlement back of the yards, vacationed in the west, saw some examples there, and wondered if it could be done here. He returned and inaugurated classes.

Keeps Its Popularity.

During his stay at the settlement, more than 4,000 horns were converted. He thought it would be successful because it was expressive of the community, but he didn't figure it would have sustaining popularity. When he came to the boys' club several months ago, he accelerated the horncraft program.

Particularly active in it are Bob Huels, 3636 Wallace street; Frank Messina, 3134 Princeton avenue; Christ and August Ghilarducci, 3134 Princeton avenue; Joe Carroll, 3633 Emerald avenue; Frank Sapinskas, 3428 Lituanica avenue; Richard Root Jr., 3635 Emerald avenue.

Does your face powder fail you in any of these 6 ways?

Women who use my new-texture powder say "goodbye" to all these troubles!
IF YOU HAVE any of the symptoms illustrated above, it's time to try my new-texture powder. For women say it helps end all these troubles—they say it gives the skin a smooth, fine, lovely finish that stays fresh for hours at a time, even in sweltering weather!
Lady Esther Face Powder does wonderful things for your skin that no ordinary face powder can do. It makes your skin look smoother and fresher—makes it look younger and more appealing.
Different in texture and shade
And here's the reason why! Lady Esther Face Powder is made a new way—by a method so different the government has granted a special patent on it! Instead of being just mixed in the usual way—it's blown by TWIN HURRICANES until it's much smoother, finer, than any powder made by usual methods. That's why it's so flattering to your skin—that's why it helps hide little lines, blemishes, tiny freckles!
The shades of Lady Esther Face Powder are blended this new way, too. Just imagine—the color is blown by hurricanes into every tiny particle of powder! No wonder Lady Esther shades are richer and more beautiful—no wonder they make your skin look fresher, make it look more glamorous and exciting!

Walter F. Terrell, oldest boating enthusiast on the Calumet river, retired from his plumbing business four years ago. He will be 78 years old Dec. 1. But when the war brought a boom in building and created a shortage in man power he deserted his hobby and again took up his wrenches.

He works only under one condition—the work must be either at a war industry or an army cantonment. Jobs at which he has worked since the war started include a munitions plant in Tennessee and Camp Atterbury, Indiana. In a few weeks he plans to do plumbing work at a new cantonment near Sparta, Wis.

Injures Knee at Camp.

Mr. Terrell, who resides at 3155 8th avenue, has been recovering from a knee injury he suffered while at Camp Atterbury. Most of this time has been spent with his boat, the Mallard, which he keeps at the Harbor Lights Boat club, 137th street and Torrence avenue. This craft, a combination sail and motor boat, once was a 26 foot lifeboat aboard a lake steamer.

He bought the boat for a box of cigars six years ago. It had been condemned by an inspector but Mr. Terrell believed it to be in good condition. When he asked the price the captain said he could have the boat if he bought the crew cigars. However, the cost of building a cabin, installing a mast, and the motor, amounted to around $400.

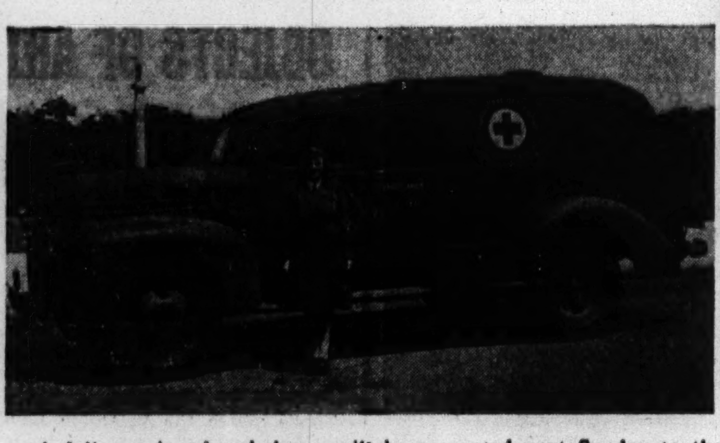
On Lake Calumet Since 1884.

His experience in boating on the Calumet river and Lake Calumet dates to 1884 when he came to Lake Calumet to witness a sculling race. Nearby he saw a small sailboat, called a "skimming dish," and bought it for $118. He has boated on the lake and river every year since then.

Mr. Terrell is a slight, active, gray haired man with certain of the facial characteristics of the old New England clipper ship captains. He was born on the west side of Chicago and recalls vividly the great fire of 1871. His family then lived at Coolidge and Sampson streets, now 13th and Throop streets.

Terrell said few of his friends who had boated with him when he first began to come to the Calumet area are now living.

Gift of Hungarian Americans



A fully equipped ambulance will be presented next Sunday to the Chicago Red Cross chapter by the South Side Federation of Hungarian American Churches and Societies. The presentation ceremony will be held at Liberty hall, 817 East 92d street. The ambulance was purchased from contributions from members of the federation in the Chesterfield, Roseland, West Pullman, Pullman, South Chicago, and South Deering communities. With the ambulance is Miss Beverly Phelps of Hinsdale, a member of the Red Cross motor corps. [Kaufmann & Fabry Photo.]

CLUB ARRANGES MOONLIGHT HIKE THRU GLEN ELLYN

A moonlight hike thru Glen Ellyn is one of five hikes and 12 bicycle trips to be held this week under auspices of the physical fitness division of the Office of Civilian Defense. The moonlight hike is sponsored by the Fort Dearborn Hiking club, and will cover a distance of five miles. The group will leave from the terminal, 134 South Wells street, at 4:05 o'clock today.

Special invitation has been extended to out of town service men temporarily stationed in Chicago to join in the Fort Dearborn outing. The program calls for a late afternoon supper at Glen Ellyn, games, stunts, group singing, and square dancing in the pavilion on the shore of Lake Ellyn. Later, there will be a leisurely hike by moonlight thru the nearby wooded trails and lanes.

Picnic lunches for the service men will be provided by members of the Fort Dearborn club. Hot coffee, tea or chocolate will be furnished by the club for 10 cents per person, with no charge to service men. The dime also will include a small amount per person necessary to cover rental cost of the pavilion which is owned and maintained by the municipality of Glen Ellyn.

Walk Thru Park.

The Mary McDowell club will walk thru Jackson park, leaving 56th street and Lake Park avenue, at 2 o'clock. On Thursday, the North Shore Hiking club will walk five miles around Bangs lake. Members will leave the Winnetka North Western station at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Four bicycle trips are scheduled for today. The Chicago Cycle club will leave 67th street and Lake Michigan at 8 o'clock this morning. The Prairie club will ride thru Beverly Hills, leaving 3230 West 67th street, at 9:30 o'clock this morning. The Tandem Cycle club will ride 15 miles from 85th street and East End avenue, at 9:30 o'clock today. The Pedal Pushers have scheduled a 50 mile ride from 1453 West 103d street, at 10 o'clock this morning.

Ride Thru Thatcher Woods.

The Maywood Cycle club will ride thru Thatcher woods on Tuesday. Four other cycle clubs have slated Tuesday rides. They are the Berwyn Cycle club, the Ogden Hill Wheelmen, the Evanston Cycle Touring club, and the Pedal Pushers. Two rides are scheduled for Thursday evening by the Sprocket Wheel Cycle club. An evening ride is planned for Friday by the Oak Park Cycle club.

WILMETTE DRAMATIZES PART IN WAR

7 SUBURBS JOIN IN FLY FOR NAVY CALL TOMORROW

Spur Enlistments at Evanston Meeting.

The north shore wing of the Chicagoland Fly for Navy drive will take off at 8 o'clock tomorrow evening in Scott hall of Northwestern university in Evanston, with more than a thousand residents of seven north suburbs pledging their united support.

Towns joining in the rally, sponsored by community members of the First World War Aviators' committee, are Evanston, Skokie, Wilmette, Glenview, Kenilworth, Winnetka, and Glencoe.

The 40 piece Navy Pier band, directed by Fred Norton, will open the meeting with the navy air force theme song, "Sky Anchors Aweigh!"

Show Official Movies.

Official movies, just released by the navy, will follow. First of these, "Sailors with Wings," portrays the life of an air cadet. It gives a history of navy aircraft and pictures modern aircraft in flight.

"The Eyes of the Navy," sequel to the first movie, includes shots of planes catapulting from the decks of destroyers and battleships, planes zooming off air bases, planes taking to the air from aircraft carriers. It shows pilots spotting enemy targets and dive bombers at work.

Speakers who will discuss the new squadrons of navy fliers being organized along the north shore are three north shore men: Commander Richard F. Whitehead, Lake Forest, in charge of naval aviation, 9th naval district; Maj. George F. Malcolm, Northfield, in charge of marine flying at the Glenview air base, and Lieut. Comm. Carl G. Olson, Northfield, senior member of the naval aviation cadet selection board in Chicago. Warren Woody of Wilmette will act as master of ceremonies.

Evanston Group Slated.

First squadron to get under way is the Evanston group which was organized some weeks ago, according to Chairman Walter Barry of Evanston and Skokie. Charter members are Thomas M. Poe, Newton Selober, George W. Armstrong, Francis W. Bond, John B. Camp, Thomas E. Boylan, John Johnson, Allen E. Kemp, Charles Schumacher, John W. Beach, John Haskell, Zymont J. Wojtczak, Dave Johnson, and Harry Reynolds. The last five of this group have already begun training in the CPT program at Skyharbor airport.

Each young man from a north suburb, as he is accepted by the cadet selection board in the Board of Trade building in Chicago, will become a member of his town's squadron. These boys will meet to hear talks by former war aviators, and receive ground instruction. The Evanston group already is meeting regularly in the Ship room of the YMCA which is squadron headquarters. Last week Ade Schumacher read letters received from navy air force boys now in the thick of battle.

Leaders In Drive.

Local men assisting in the north shore "Fly for Navy" drive are headed by Donald C. Brock of Winnetka and Walter Barry. Committee members are Warren Woody, Wilmette; Guy C. Chase, Skokie; Victor Jones, Evanston; Ade Schumacher, Evanston, and Winnetkans Joseph M. Graffis, Marquis Bowman, Gordon Smith, Earle Johnson, and John T. Metcalf.

Coöperating with these men are the various American Legion posts, the Elks, the YMCA's, Evanston Township High school, New Trier High school, the Rotary clubs, the Chambers of Commerce, and Niles Township High school.

Information booths will be maintained at the YMCA in Evanston from 7 to 9 o'clock every evening and in the Winnetka Community house from 7 to 9 o'clock every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday during August and September. At least one World war aviator will be in attendance each evening.

Miss Betty Schmidt of Evanston, art instructor at Cornell college, Ia., has devoted the last several weeks to making posters which merchants are displaying in their show windows.

MILITARY ORDER OF GUARDS PLANS EVANSTON UNIT

Plans for the formation of an Evanston squadron of the Military Order of Guards were announced recently by Mrs. Arthur E. Meling, who will serve as commander of the new unit of equestrians.

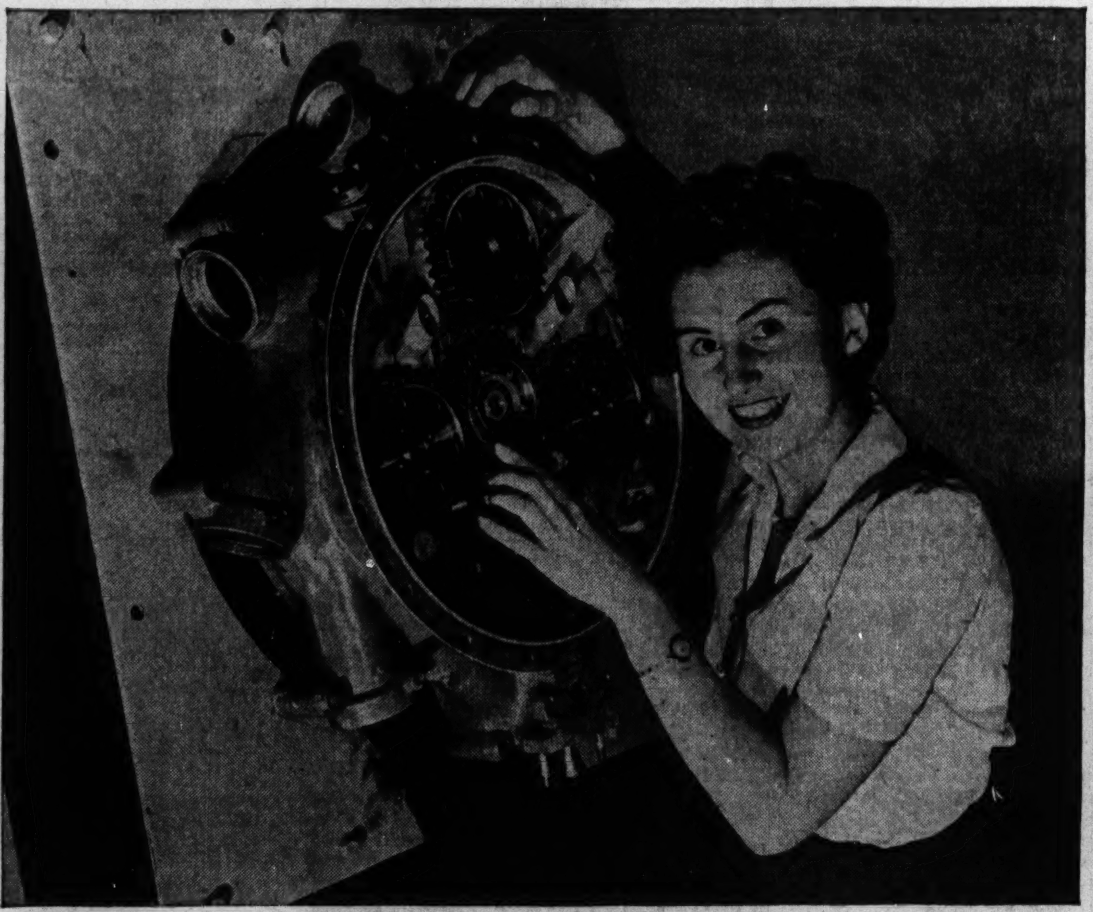
Membership will be open to men and women over 18 years old and citizens of the United States. They must be interested in riding and military training.

Mrs. Meling, who has long been active in the Chicago squadron and holds the rank of second lieutenant, announced the unit will meet once a week to receive training in riding, footwork and rifle and pistol drill under reserve army officers.

Evanston Pastor Returns from Vacation Trip Today

The Rev. Wallace G. McGeoch, pastor of the United Presbyterian church in Evanston, will be back in his pulpit this morning after a brief vacation in Monmouth and Moline.

Teachers Prepare for Opening of Preflight Classes in High School



School Teacher Dorothy Glaub, 4442 North Francisco avenue, is mastering the whys and wherefores of these complicated looking gears so she may teach her students pre-aeronautics this fall. Loyola university this summer introduced a course in aeronautics to prepare instructors for this new high school science.

As part of their laboratory work in service and maintenance of airplane engines, Paul Mattei, civil pilot training co-ordinator at De Paul university, which is co-operating with Loyola in offering the pre-aeronautics course, shows Toni Herb and the Rev. J. B. Tremonti, C. S. V., how to inspect a Pratt-Whitney airplane motor.

Chicago's teachers have become air minded, giving up their summer vacations to take the aeronautics course at Loyola. Civil air regulations, general service and maintenance of aircraft, meteorology for pilots and aerial navigation are the four subjects being taught in the ground school classes.

Girl Cabbies Aces in High; Reverse? Huh!

"My women drivers are pretty good—in fact, they are more careful than the men. But like all women, they can't back up." Elif Rasmussen, proprietor of the Glencoe Cab company, paused as he tinkered with one of his cab motors to say that two of his five cabs are now driven by women. Eight of his drivers have joined the army or the navy.

Evelyn Hebard, 22 years old, 383 Park avenue, Glencoe, who learned to drive in the hills around Viola, Wis., likes driving a taxi, because "You hear all the town gossip. Everybody has a different opinion and so many different things to say." Previously she worked in the cab company office but she much prefers being outdoors driving.

The other woman taxi driver, Irene Palmer, 394 Jefferson avenue, who formerly was a model and then an office worker, likes her new job, too, altho "it was murder until I could find my way around the streets, but I like being my own boss. Lots of people don't have much faith in women drivers but they are getting used to us."

Not In for Keeps.

Miss Hebard is driving a cab only for the duration until her "boy friend" comes from the army. Stationed at Middle River, Md., he spent most of his recent furlough riding in the taxi with Miss Hebard. Taxi driving is a means to an end for Miss Palmer, who is saving money to take flying lessons. She would like to be able to fly for the Chinese army, "where women get a chance."

Taxi driving is hard work, the two women agreed. At first, their arms got tired and their left legs ached from using the clutch. They start driving at 7 o'clock in the morning and every nine days they get two days off. They drive around 2,000 miles a month, mostly to the nearby suburbs. Their income, including wages, tips, and commissions, averages about $25 a week.

The girls say replacing men as drivers has its pros and cons. The advantage of not having to buy silk stockings is balanced against the problem of finding slacks which will keep their press and not get baggy from so much sitting.

Let "George" Fix Flats.

Altho they haven't had any tire trouble as yet, the girls don't intend to fix any flats. "We'll just get out and call up the boss," Miss Palmer said in cheerful anticipation.

"Most of the passengers are very polite," Miss Hebard said. "I've never met any one who wasn't nice." The women can refuse to pick up any passenger they distrust and they are not allowed to drive the taxis after 6 o'clock in the evening.

Most of their passengers ride with them daily. The day follows a regular routine of taking business men to the railroad station, children to school, women to beauty parlors, and club meetings and then taking them all back home.

They're Tough if Need Be.

The men taxi drivers in Glencoe have been very helpful in giving the women directions but Miss Palmer has a special grudge against Chicago cabbies. When she took a passenger into the La Salle street station, all the men drivers crowded her. "I just kept going and gave them all a bump. My fenders are extra heavy. Traffic jams hold no terrors for her, but the other day when she ran over a chipmunk, this taxi driver had to stop the car. "I cried like a baby," she said.

This Soldier's Motto: If Shoe Fits, Wear It

Boots, boots, boots—the old lament of Kipling's soldiers could well be the theme song of 26 year old Corp. Henry Mellen, who is in charge of fitting each new soldier at Fort Sheridan to the right shoe.

There's no kicking one's shoes off under the table in the army, but Corp. Mellen seldom gives out a shoe that is too small. His experience in private life, which he started in his own shoe store in Peoria, gave him an eagle eye for the right size.

Only One Style in Army.

Altho he has only one style of shoe in his army shop, Corp. Mellen has 126 sizes from 5-A to 15-EE. If a soldier's feet are too big or too small for those sizes, three pairs of shoes are ordered for him from the Boston quartermaster warehouse. Special sized shoes are required for three or four men every day.

The smallest pair of shoes Corp. Mellen recalls fitting was size 4-C for a man weighing approximately 85 pounds. One of the largest pairs, a size 14½-B went to a man 6 feet 4 inches tall who weighed 250 pounds. The narrowest shoe was a 13½-AAAA, while the widest was a 5-EEEEE.

Fits 528 in Two Hours.

It takes a speedup system to get the new draftees fitted. Corp. Mellen's record is 528 soldiers fitted in 2 hours and 6 minutes or an average of 14 seconds per man. Only seven pairs of those shoes were returned because they didn't fit.

Guest Preacher.

The Second Presbyterian church of Evanston announces that its guest speaker this morning will be the Rev. Albert O. Hjerpe, minister of the Immanuel Presbyterian church, Cincinnati.

2 CHILDREN BELIEVE BEANSTALK TALE NOW; THEIR GARDEN'S PROOF

So impossible did the story of Jack and the Beanstalk seem to Charles Edry and Margaret Jane that when their father, Charles E. Johnson, 6048 North Maplewood avenue, said they were going to plant beans that would climb a pole, they laughed and said, "Tell us another fairy story!"

The beans were planted. Poles five feet high were put into the ground. For weeks the plants looked like bush beans, but then as if by magic they started to send out shoots that wound around the sticks.

Days later, when the climbers had reached the top, the poles were extended to the garage roof. But it wasn't long before the ambitious bean plants reached that point. Four times the Johnson children extended the poles—and the beans are still climbing. Now they're 14½ feet high, and with several weeks of warm weather ahead Charles Edry and Margaret Jane are wondering how they can harvest their crop unless they do as Jack did—chop their beanstalks down.

C. J. Frische has been elected commander of Joseph M. Sesterhenn post, American Legion. Previously he had served the post as adjutant and finance officer. Other officers chosen included N. A. Ragland, vice commander; Charles Schmitz, finance officer; Walter Rugen, service officer and Harry LaQueur, sergeant at arms. The executive committee will consist of John J. Peter, retiring commander, Ralph Synnestvedt, and Carl C. Rennecker. Arthur Fitzgerald has been appointed adjutant. Installation will take place early in September.

Plans to install five giant air raid sirens in the north section of the city have just been completed, according to Lee Ross, north division director of civilian defense.

These sirens will have a circular range audibility of three to four and a half miles and will be spaced so that all residents of the north side will be able to hear the warning signal. In the event of an alarm, the sirens will give out a steady blast of two minutes' duration on the alert. The all-clear signal will consist of fluctuating blasts, also for a two minute period.

Operated by Motor.

The larger of two types to be installed, which is operated by a Chrysler motor, will be known as the "Chrysler Victory bell." It is a motor-generator model developed in the Bell laboratories under the supervision of the United States Bureau of Standards.

The siren revolves on a turntable when in operation and can be heard from two to two and a quarter miles in every direction.

Three of these sirens will be installed on top of fire stations at 158 West Erie street, 2747 North Sheffield avenue, and 1723 Greenleaf avenue.

The second type siren, which is steam operated, was developed by the Foster Engineering company, and 150 pounds of live steam pressure must be available 24 hours a day. This type can be heard approximately one and a half miles from the location of the siren.

Plan Additional Sirens.

Two steam sirens will be installed at the city pumping station, 742 Montrose avenue, and at the Revere Copper and Brass plant, 2200 North Natchez avenue.

Private individuals, factories, and business concerns also are contemplating the installation of sirens to augment the OCD equipment. Mr. Ross states expenses incurred for this community service are deductible from private corporation taxes.

Twenty concerns already have indicated their interest in having sirens of their own. Among these are the Kraft Cheese company, the Container Corporation of America, the Oscar Mayer company, Chief Wash company, Victor Adding Machine company, Curtiss Candy company, American Colortype company, and the Bell & Howell company.

Thaviu Band to Appear in Lincoln Park Concert

The Lincoln park concert will be presented this evening by the A. F. Thaviu band and will feature as soloists Florence Bernstein, soprano, and Ben Landsman, baritone.

VILLAGE TO SEE AIR RAID DRILL IN NIGHT SHOW

Defense Jamboree Is Next Wednesday.

"Defense in Wilmette" is the theme of the Civilian Defense jamboree to be held in the Wilmette bowl at 8 o'clock next Wednesday evening. What the village has done—what the village is prepared to do in emergency—will be demonstrated before an estimated 5,000 citizens.

Highlight will come with the final act—a dramatic presentation titled "Air Raid" which portrays the first flash of the warning lights at local civilian defense headquarters and continues thru the simulated bombing of the town and action by demolition, first aid, and emergency medical units.

Kinne to Speak.

With presentation of the colors by the Evanston American Legion Drum and Bugle corps, directed by Edward R. Gensch, the night's program will get under way. Following the presentation George M. Menard, WLS singer and announcer, will lead the crowd in singing patriotic tunes.

An address by Harry C. Kinne, village president, will stress the vital rôle civilian defense can play in the total war picture.

Members of the Wilmette Victory theater, a division of the physical fitness program of OCD, have been busy for the last several weeks rehearsing a playlet, "The Women," which follows Kinne's talk. Written by Franklyn E. Doan and produced by Arthur L. Green, it depicts the change in attitude after Pearl Harbor, particularly in the case of women who have sacrificed bridge for knitting, Red Cross, and civilian defense activities.

Drilling by military institute graduates will be conducted on the field by Col. George R. Harbaugh of Wilmette. It will include squad formations, manual of arms, and intricate drilling maneuvers. These men, about 20 in all, are candidates for instructor's ratings.

Sports Celebrities to Appear.

With emphasis on physical fitness, a sports celebrities roundup will be featured. Present at the bowl will be William Harridge, Wilmette, president of the American league, and Lynn O. Waldorf, Wilmette, football coach at Northwestern university.

Elmer Layden, commissioner of the National Professional Football league, and Jack J. Elder, secretary of the Illinois Athletic commission, will speak briefly, along with James T. Gallagher and Jim Wilson of the Chicago Cubs.

Mrs. George B. Williams of Wilmette, representing the American Red Cross, will announce details on the mobile blood donor unit which will be in Wilmette from Sept. 8 thru Sept. 12. Mrs. Williams is a third time blood donor.

Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn return in another of the playlets on Wilmette's civilian defense, "The Tale of a Tin Can." Playing in the stellar rôles are Joseph Theis, Kenilworth, and John Fanning, Wilmette. The rest of the cast will be composed of Wilmette cub scouts directed by Harold Lundberg.

Story of Tincan.

This playlet, also written by Doan, is directed by Mrs. John E. Sullivan. It tells the story of preparing a tin can for reclamation and its importance in these times.

Presentation of "Air Raid," which was written for the jamboree by William J. Murphy Jr., head of the NBC continuity department in Chicago, who is a resident of Wilmette, will climax the affair. Miss Anne Keith of the drama faculty of New Trier High school will be director.

Members of the cast, drawn from a list of the most active civilian defense workers, include Joseph E. Barton, defense commander; James C. Anderson, chairman of the auxiliary police; Ralph E. Colville, chairman of the fire committee; George F. Scherzer, chairman of air raid wardens, and Benjamin B. Shapiro, chairman of the public works and utilities committee.

Dance Band to Play.

All lighting effects will be supervised by C. Herbert Jones, Wilmette, a member of the faculty of New Trier High school. Sound effects, furnished by NBC, will be handled by John B. Gleason of Glencoe. David C. Leach Jr. will be in charge of properties and stage management.

Plans have been completed for the dance band of the naval reserve aviation base at Glenview to play popular music at intervals during the evening's program.

Our Saviour's Methodists Giving Dinner Wednesday

Our Saviour's Methodist church will hold a congregational rally and dinner next Wednesday evening. The congregation also will conduct its fourth quarterly conference under the direction of District Supt. J. W. Beckstrom.

TEACHERS READY TO GIVE COURSES IN AERONAUTICS

They Learn What to Tell High School Pupils.

High school students soon will be talking with authority about the stress on an aileron, for at Loyola university, as well as at other Chicago universities, high school teachers have spent their summer vacations learning to teach what makes a plane fly.

Dr. William Johnson, superintendent of schools, recently announced that courses in preflight aeronautics would be offered to the juniors and seniors as credited electives in the science departments to give the students preliminary training for the air forces. Several parochial schools will offer similar classes.

More than 25 teachers from Chicago's public and parochial schools are enrolled in the Loyola aeronautic course, which was introduced this year in coöperation with De Paul university. Teachers will receive certificates upon completion of the course and those working for degrees will receive regular college credits. Tuition is being paid by the Civil Aeronautics administration if the teacher plans to use his new knowledge solely to teach classes in preaviation.

Course Ends Aug. 31.

The course which began early in July and will continue until Aug. 31 involves 72 hours of class work. The teachers attend classes every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings at Loyola's downtown school, 28 North Franklin street.

Four aeronautical subjects are being taught in the ground school classes at Loyola. In the civil air regulation classes, the teachers are learning military standards, flying regulations, and weather factors. Next fall they will be able to teach their students cooling, lubrication, carburetion, and ignition principles, as well as the operation, care, and maintenance of aircraft engines as a result of their class in general service and maintenance of aircraft.

The Loyola course in meterology covers air masses, the water cycle, storms, and weather freaks, the wave theory, and how to interpret the weather map. Chart reading, pilotage, dead reckoning, interceptor problems, and use of the compass are included in the aerial navigation class.

Planes Used in Laboratory.

E. S. Staples of the Lewis School of Aeronautics at Lockport, which conducts the flying program for Loyola university, is teaching the ground school classes. For special instruction the planes at Lockport air field have served for laboratory work.

The University of Illinois, Chicago Normal school, and Northwestern university also offered summer classes in aeronautics to prepare the city's teachers for their preflight classes this fall. Dr. Clyde M. Campbell, consultant to the Civil Aeronautics administration for Illinois, who has been helping Dr. Johnson set up the new science courses, said that by the end of October Chicago will have more high school students in preaeronautics than any other city.

As part of this "air conditioning" program for the high schools, Dr. Johnson plans to adapt every course in the schools to the new developments of aviation. All the teachers in the city will meet Sept. 21 thru Sept. 24 at Lane Technical High school to learn how aviation has modified their geography, history, or mathematics subjects.

Chicago high school students are being prepared not only for service in the air forces during the war, but for the developments of the postwar air age.

Y Camp at Lemont Begins Final Session This Week

Camp Sagawau, YWCA camp for high school girls near Lemont, begins its fourth and final camping period this week. Among newcomers for the last camp days are Lorayne Ruthrauf, 5230 North Winthrop avenue, and Charlotte Blake, 1209 Astor street. A favorite project with the girls is the making of cloth animals to be sent on a Christmas ship to England, where they will be distributed to refugee children of Europe.

Another Signalman for Navy

"That's the way to hoist," Chief Petty Officer Francis Doyle (right), instructor at the naval training school for signalmen at Butler university, tells John Dondzik, who resided with his uncle at 820 North Ashland avenue before joining the navy. Altho he was born here, Dondzik was in Poland at the time of the German invasion. He escaped, but his family is still somewhere in the occupied country.

GEN. CLINNIN FAMILY HISTORY REPEATED AS SON ENTERS SERVICE

It was 48 years ago that John V. Clinnin, then a rookie in the Illinois National guard, began the military career that saw him rise to the rank of major general. It was four months ago that a new chapter in the Clinnin family history was started, when Paul F. Clinnin, son of the general, enlisted as a private in the signal corps of the army air service.

John F. Clinnin.

Paul has a big job ahead if he matches his father's record, which shows advancement from private to colonel in the Guard unit between 1894 and 1917. He was on Mexican border patrol duty in 1916 and 1917 and served as colonel of the AEF 130th infantry during the World war, winning the United States distinguished service medal, the Purple Heart medal, and other citations, and leaving the service with the rank of brigadier general a few years after the war.

Maj. Gen. Clinnin won his present rank when he was made head of the Illinois reserve militia on Dec. 4, 1940. He held this post more than two years until his retirement from active duty last April 5. Gen. Clinnin is commissioner of Western conference college athletics and formerly was chairman of the Illinois State Athletic commission. The Clinnin home is at 259 Maple Hill road, Glencoe.

Also carrying on the Clinnin military name are two of Paul's cousins, Walter Clinnin Jr., and John V. Clinnin II., sons of Walter Clinnin, 7051 Oglesby avenue, both in the air service.

Graduates will receive the degree of bachelor of science in commerce. A broad cultural base of liberal arts courses has been developed for the first two years, while the basic commerce courses and specialized secretarial courses are offered in the junior and senior years.

GUIDE BOOK PLAN TO TOUR CITY IN 7 DAYS IS TOUGH

Reporter Gets Sore Feet the First Day.

War conditions have caused the Chicago Recreation commission to remind Chicagoans of the vacation advantages of their city. They have issued a booklet which in other times would have been intended solely for the visitor. A reporter, new to Chicago, has taken the first tour.

BY JOSEPH GREEN.

You'll have an interesting day seeing Chicago the recreation commission way. But you may have to skip the suggested route for the second day until you can recover from the first, unless you are a superman.

Probably you'll feel much better after you've had a hot bath and soaked your feet in hot water for a while and you are likely to go to bed early, even if you have decided you'll just take it easy the next day.

But for the benefit of others who plan to trust a booklet, "Vacationing in Chicago" and follow the suggested program, "Spending Seven Days in Chicago," they should spend some time hardening themselves for the job.

Morning: Take the I. C. or the elevated out to Jackson park and visit the Museum of Science and Industry.

Lunch at the museum or at International house or at the coffee shop on the University of Chicago campus.

Afternoon Program.

Afternoon: Visit the University of Chicago chapel, the Oriental institute, and other campus buildings or nearby churches of interest. Take a No. 1 bus [South Park way, west end of Washington park] north to the loop, transfer to a No. 51 and ride to Devon avenue and Broadway. Nearby are Loyola university and Mundelein college.

Dinner on the far north side.

Evening: Many motion picture theaters, dancing or swimming in this area. Back to the loop by street car, elevated or bus.

After you have trod the marble floors of the Museum of Science and Industry for a couple of hours [and you could spend a day and not see it all] you may feel you have spent enough time improving your mind for one day. You've seen some of Jackson park, with its winding, smooth driveways and the beach and lake beyond.

Many Races Represented.

At last you find International house. Dinner is served on a stone terrace looking into a quiet court where a fountain splashes. You see that International house really has a meaning. One of the waitresses appears to be Chinese. A woman who comes in with a curly haired Irishman might be Indian, Egyptian or Syrian, but has a pleasant manner and speaks beautiful English. There are others of various races.

You drag yourself away from the pleasant surroundings and again continue your tour of the campus, including the university chapel, the Oriental institute and other buildings, if you have time.

You walk into the chapel and startle a colored soldier and his girl sitting near the door on the back pew. Down front a blonde girl and her instructor are struggling with sharps and flats in a lesson on a big, gold harp.

It's quiet and peaceful. The church is beautiful. You go on, however, to the next stop, and even with a map of the campus you get lost en route to the Oriental institute, only two blocks away.

You must hurry. You walk around, glance at a couple of mummies and a huge statue of King Tutankhamen of Egypt, and view a huge stone statuary bull's head recovered from Persian ruins. Then you buy a pamphlet guide of the museum for 10 cents and decide you'll come back later.

Washington park, next stop, is right over there, some one tells you. Two blocks to the east end, or perhaps three. You are supposed to walk to the west end. You do and learn that this is the Negro section of the city. You see thousands of colored citizens enjoying the park. Several hundred crowd a big swimming pool.

Then you get to the west end and the first bus that comes along is No. 1. You crawl feebly aboard and drop into the nearest seat. The worst is over. Now you can ride a long way.

You expected to see something of the north side beaches, but it's too late. When the bus gets going along Michigan avenue and the Outer drive you're jammed against a wall and the aisles are full of people.

You see some of Lincoln park, but a fellow with a dirty shirt blocks the view the other way. He's one of the crowd hurrying home from work. You arrive at Devon avenue and Broadway and see towering Mundelein college and the Loyola campus beyond. You're willing to call it a day. Somehow you're willing now to forego the motion picture theaters, dancing and swimming. You hop the first bus back to the loop, heading for the rest and comfort of your home.

You know that Chicago is a big, busy city. You're aware that there are many places of interest, many facilities for recreation. You know you want to see and do dozens of things suggested in "Vacationing in Chicago."

But you'll resolve, also, to take your time about it.

STRESS WAR ROLE IN FRATERNITY'S ANNUAL SCHOOL

SAE Begins Eighth Annual School.

North Shore undergraduates and alumni of Sigma Alpha Epsilon today join 200 representatives from 113 chapters in 44 states as they begin their eighth Leadership Training school in the fraternity headquarters, Levere Memorial temple, Evanston.

The delegates will be schooled in the rôle they can assume in helping the war effort as well as the responsibilities of the various undergraduate chapters.

Handles School Planning.

Detailed planning for the school, which continues thru Saturday, is being handled by Lauren Foreman of Evanston, executive secretary of SAE, in charge of the fraternity national headquarters. He is assisted by Albert J. Schoth, chapter supervisor, and Gordon Duncan, associate editor of the fraternity magazine.

At 5 o'clock this evening the group will gather socially to see SAE motion pictures and enjoy a buffet supper, after which there will be a song fest and talk on the history of the fraternity.

School Opens Tomorrow.

School begins tomorrow morning. According to Foreman, these sessions will strees fund raising campaigns for the purchase of war bonds and stamps, coöperation with nearby army and many camps in housing and entertaining servicemen and ways of building morale.

Faculty members will include Harry S. Bunting of Lake Forest; George N. Short, SAE national president; Dr. Fred H. Turner, dean of men at the University of Illinois; Judge Alfred K. Knippert of Cincinnati, and others prominent in the fraternity.

In addition to war's impact on the fraternity, such problems as chapter management, rushing and pledge training, initiation, and scholarship will be considered.

"On the lighter side," Committeeman Duncan states, "is the dance Wednesday night. Bob Eimers of Skokie has turned himself into a one man date bureau, and is on the lookout for the north shore's most beautiful girls."

Evanstonians Participate.

Among Evanstonians expected to participate in the training school are Knowlton B. Dahl, David W. Goad, Virgil C. Jones, Maurice A. Kent Jr., Keith Landis, Wesley I. Nunn Jr., John W. Rutledge, Howard F. Wheeler, David C. Stukey Jr., Highland Park, and Harry S. Bunting, Lake Forest.

Members of the national office staff in Evanston, who will register out of town delegates this evening, are Mrs. Eva Hansen, Mrs. Florence Reynolds, Miss Ruth O'Malley, all of Evanston; Miss Eunice Thompson, Winnetka, and Mrs. Elinor Buehrig, Chicago.

Tenor and Marion Claire to Join in Duet.

William Hain, tenor, will be the guest Saturday on W-G-N and the Mutual network's "America Loves a Melody" program to be aired from 8 to 9 p. m. He will appear with Marion Claire, soprano star of the concert series.

Hain, who starred for five seasons with the New York Opera Comique, will offer three solo selections and sing a duet with Miss Claire. His solos will be: Lehar's "Love Is a Pilgrim," Speak's "Sylvia," and the serenade from Romberg's "Student Prince." His duet selection with Miss Claire will be Coward's "I'll See You Again."

Miss Claire will also offer three solo selections: "Say Not Love Is a Dream," by Lehar; a special arrangement of "Ave Maria," and Herbert's "Love Is Best of All" from "Princess Pat."

Musical background will be supplied by the W-G-N Symphony orchestra under the baton of Henry Weber and by the chorus directed by Robert Trendler. The orchestra will be heard playing two selections: Weinberger's "Polka" from "Schwanda," and the "Gypsy Dance" from Bizet's "Carmen."

Michael Wilkomirsky, concert master of the orchestra, will play a violin solo of Tschaikowsky's "Melodie." The chorus will sing Lehar's "Carnival" and also will be heard with the soloists.

Two of the selections, "Sylvia" and "I'll See You Again," are drawn from $25 prize winning letters written by members of the radio audience. The story behind the winners' favorite songs will be dramatized on the program.

Kenneth MacGregor, W-G-N chief of production, will be the producer and Marvin Mueller will be the announcer.

ELSON, SAVAGE IN BROADCAST OF ALL-STAR GAME

Bob Elson and Guy Savage, W-G-N veteran sports announcers, have been selected to air W-G-N and the Mutual network's exclusive broadcast of the ninth annual Chicago Bears-College All-Stars football game direct from Soldiers' field from 9 to 11:30 p. m. next Friday.

Elson, who will be broadcasting his ninth straight All-Star game, will give the play-by-play account while Savage will supply the color and background material.

The game is sponsored by Chicago Tribune Charities, Inc., with the proceeds going to the Army Emergency and Navy Relief funds. According to advance estimates, the service charities will receive approximately $160,000 as more than 100,000 persons will witness the game. This crowd will assure the All-Star event first place in sports donations for any single game.

The Bears are champions of the National Professional Football league while the All-Stars were selected in newspaper and radio polls all over the country from the ranks of last season's outstanding seniors.

Bob Zuppke, former head coach at the University of Illinois, will direct the All-Stars' squad of 62 men. His assistants will be Oregon State's Lon Steiner, Texas Aggies' Homer Norton, Northwestern's Burt Ingwersen, and Notre Dame's Frank Leahy. The Chicago Bears are piloted by George Halas, owner-coach.

TEACHING POSTS FILLED THO WAR JOBS LURE MANY

Puffer Replaces 500 in County Schools.

Altho teachers are deserting their profession this year in favor of better wages and easier working conditions in war industries, the office of Noble J. Puffer, county superintendent of schools, is nearly done with the job of listing 6,000 instructors for the new year. Only 50 remained to be hired last week.

Stricter standards for teachers become effective Sept. 1, but the year's staff is expected to be complete before that date, so the higher standards need not apply this year, according to a spokesman in Puffer's office. Some of this year's staff will not have college degrees as required by the new rules, but may have only three years of normal school work. This eased the hiring job. Lowering standards to pre-1938 requirements of only two year normal school degrees has not been necessary.

Hire 500 New Teachers.

The inroads of war thru the draft, enlistments and industry competition are indicated by the fact that 500 new teachers had to be hired this year compared with only 381 last year.

It was emphasized, however, that no shortage of qualified candidates exists. Despite the war, the ratio of women to men teachers will remain at about 20 to 1, as last year.

Most of the remaining shortages are in rural primary schools where transportation is a major problem. Prospective teachers hesitate to use tires in school work when they can save them and get more money in other jobs, it was reported. And where rural teachers used to stay in nearby farmhouses, these rooms are no longer available.

Plan to Aid Bond Sales.

With the teacher problem nearly solved for the general opening on the day after Labor day, Puffer is looking to other problems to be brought on by war in the school year. Already plans have been made for coöperation in sale of war saving stamps, war bonds, and other patriotic activities.

To meet the war emergencies, Puffer has named an advisory committee to decide questions of school war activities.

CATHOLIC SCHOOL PLANS

New courses designed to keep students in touch with the war will be introduced in Catholic elementary and high schools Tuesday, Sept. 8, when 170,000 students return to classes. Msgr. Daniel Cunningham, superintendent of Catholic schools in the Chicago archdiocese, said that the pupils of the elementary upper grades will be given courses stressing the history of the South American countries and the Pacific islands.

Classes in home economics and home nursing will be inaugurated or expanded in Catholic girls' school here Emphasis in the boys' high schools will be placed on mathematics, mechanical drawing, and scientific subjects.

Keep Same Schedule.

Classes will operate on the same schedule as heretofore, altho arrangements have been made to stagger the hours should it prove necessary.

Holy Redeemer school in Evergreen Park is the only new parochial school to be opened this year. St. Augustine's grammar, 5045 Laflin street, and St. Malachy's, 2248 Washington boulevard, have added secondary courses. St. Barbara's, 2859 South Throop street, will abandon its commercial designation and become a regular four year high school. St. Ann's, 1814 South Leavitt street, will start the semester as a four year coeducational high school. St. Felicitas, 1526 East 84th street, will add a two year coeducational commercial course to its program.

Enrollment Decrease Seen.

A decrease of 1,500 in grammar school enrollments is anticipated this year. The approximate enrollment is expected to be 147,591, and high school enrollments are expected to reach 29,195.

Mount Carmel, Catholic south side boys' high school, will introduce a course in aeronautics, a pretraining of aviation cadets in accordance with the army air force's suggestion. The fundamentals of aerodynamics, meteorology, navigation, and civil air rules will be taught.

Boss Praises Women as Cab Drivers

A. P. M'Mahon to End 37 Years' Service.

Thirty-seven years ago young Alexander Patrick McMahon, then 25 years old, became a mail carrier. On Aug. 1, 222,000,000 steps later, Postman McMahon hung up his pouch for the last time and took his well earned pension.

A. P. McMahon.

Behind him are 37 years of faithful, pleasant service in the Lakeview neighborhood, for McMahon has been delivering mail in the same part of the city ever since he began. Among those who will miss his pleasant smile and cheerful manner are the children and grandchildren of some of his original "clients." Many among them have had important tidings carried into their lives by Postman McMahon.

Official Count of Steps.

McMahon's estimate that he has taken 222,000,000 steps in line of duty is based on a survey several years ago in which it was determined that the average mailman walks from 9 to 12 miles a day in making his rounds. McMahon believes his average would be about 10 miles, or 20,000 steps a day—six million steps in a working year of 300 days.

Little out of the ordinary has happened in line of duty, McMahon says. He has been chased by dogs a few times, and incurred the wrath of their owners by kicking at them, but has never been seriously bitten.

"I remember how eagerly parents used to watch for news of their sons in the last war," he said. "Now it's the same thing again. I recall occasions when I would withhold what I knew was bad news until after a holiday had passed.

Two Sons In Air Corps.

"You see, we mailmen get to know families so well that we can tell whether the nondelivery of a saddening letter would be a boon or a hindrance. We listen so long to their problems—of business, of social contacts, and of family—that we get to know their affairs pretty well."

McMahon now knows parental anxiety first hand. Two of his sons have enlisted in the air corps and have been assigned he knows not where. Emmett is a ground crew member and Timothy is a bombardier. Another son, Thomas, 728 Belmont avenue, put one hitch in the navy and is now employed in a defense plant.

7,500 Hours War Knitting Is Evanston Club Record

Records of the Woman's club of Evanston show that club workers and units serviced by them have completed more than 7,500 hours of knitting this summer. Their output has included 160 women's and children's garments and 226 sweaters, socks, caps, bags, and helmets, all for shipment wherever needed.

Beans Still Grow

Charles Edry and Margaret Jane, children of Charles E. Johnsons, 6048 North Maplewood avenue, use a 10 foot ladder to tend their pole beans.

SEN. TAFT LEADS AIR FORUM STUDY OF WAR FINANCE

Sen. Robert A. Taft of Ohio will lead a discussion on war financing in the American Forum of the Air program over W-G-N, W59C, and the Mutual network from 7 to 7:45 o'clock this evening. Completing the panel will be a labor leader, a treasury consultant, and a corporation executive.

The labor leader is James B. Carey, secretary of the CIO. Prof. Erwin Griswold, special consultant to the treasury department, now on leave from Harvard university, and J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman of the board of directors of Universal Pictures, and chairman of the government finance committee of the National Association of Manufacturers, complete the panel.

Title of the war tax discussion is "Sales Tax? Withholding Tax? What Measures Are Necessary?"

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

There are long weeks ahead when exterior painting of a house is possible. For centuries home owners have known that paint improves the appearance of a house and protects it from attacks of fungus growth and decay, but now we also are aware that paint gives a wood house an added degree of fire protection. And the same holds true for a wood shingle roof.

We are told by paint experts who have made practical tests that a single coat of paint to the wooden walls of a house will raise its flame resistance to a definite degree. Of course some woods ignite more easily than others, but all woods are given more fire protection by paint, and while some paints put up a stiffer resistance to fire than others, all paints possess a certain ability to defy flame.

Aids Defense Plans.

Any type of fire resistance we can give to our houses now to make them safer for the duration is a gift to national defense. While we are inspecting our houses to keep them in repair for the year ahead, it would be well to check on ways to make them safer from fires.

We should examine first of all the danger spots where fires start and see if we cannot put them in better shape. These spots can be found from cellar to attic, all thru the house.

The need is imperative now to clear out all junk from the attic; all rubbish catchall piles with their rags, papers, magazines, and clothing. They are a potential menace. Spontaneous combustion has caused more fires than most people know, and even the ink in old newspapers can start a devastating fire. Moreover, if furniture must be stored in an attic it should not be jammed close to the roof, but spaced out. Remove basement junk.

Some Safety Resolutions.

Fire-retard the basement ceiling.

Make sure your heating plant isn't going to start work this fall in an ailing state. Defective heating plants are one of the biggest single causes of fires.

Have your electric wiring checked by a licensed electrician if your house is old and its wiring is not according to present standards.

Place fire-stops of incombustible material between studs in the walls at floor levels if your house is constructed with hollow spaces in the walls which run from attic to cellar.

Protect or move pipes that are too near wood. Smoke pipes should be at least 18 inches from any wood. [You may have been getting by with closer spacing for quite some time but wood, subjected to heat, gets too dry for safety after a period of months or years.]

Paint your roof if it is an old wooden shingle one and thus give it a chance to put up a fight against sparks from your own chimney of your neighbor's.

Monday, Aug. 24

Evergreen planting should be done in September as the plants require an earlier start than decidious shrubs. There is a wide variety from which to make a selection. For background use and screening the white pine, Norway spruce, and Colorado green spruce are excellent.

Care must be taken not to plant large growing kinds near the house. Selection and location should be carefully studied before ordering for these plants endure for a considerable time. Do not cut back these plants when planting. Japanese and Siberian iris can be divided and planted now.

Tuesday, Aug. 25

Pot strawberries can be planted. They will give a small crop next season. Give privet hedges the final trimming. Plant madonna lilies as soon as they can be obtained. No more than 2 inches deep. Crocuses are excellent in the rock garden and should be planted early.

Harvest onions when the tops turn yellow, dry in the sun, and store in low boxes in a cool place. Perennials started in June and July should be transplanted to permanent quarters at this time to give them time to gain a firm start before freezing weather.

Make cuttings of English ivy, heliotrope, and poinsettias for winter flowering. The latter is worth a trial, altho it will require a somewhat uniform temperature and abundant light. By digging plantain and other weeds in the lawn now, filling in the bare spots with soil and reseeding, repairs will be affected that will give a better lawn.

Wednesday, Aug. 26

Remove all seed formations from plants, unless the seed is wanted for propagation purposes, because much strength is required to produce it. Prepare the soil for peonies sometime before planting to allow it to settle. Make the holes deeper than the plants are to go in and use rich soil for peonies are gross feeders.

Sow a cover crop, such as millett, hairy vetch, or crimson clover. Plow vacant lots for sowing with alfalfa to keep down weeds and for its feeding value. Cut dahlia blooms in late afternoon, strip off the lower leaves, and plunge the stems in hot water leaving them in it until the water cools.

Thursday, Aug. 27

Cut out all suckers on grafted shrubs and roses. Gardeners should visit other gardens and note plants and methods that may be used and if a permanent record of garden operations is kept it will be of great reference value in future years. Try potting a lily for Christmas flowering.

An application of fertilizer around each peony plant will strengthen it for next season's bloom. The coldframe is a fine place in which to grow a fast crop of lettuce and radishes. Remove old canes from raspberries. Dig a few plants of parsley and pot them; they will supply garnishing material all winter.

Friday, Aug. 28

From now on amaryllis bulbs should be allowed to rest or become dormant. They will start into activity again during winter when they may be watered. Like all plants they require a resting period. Cut back goldenglow severely and it will flower again.

Fall plowing of land intended for vegetable growing next season should be under way.

Saturday, Aug. 29

The calla lily is a fine plant for home use in the winow and it should be potted now. The size of the roots [rhizomes] vary from the small to those 8 inches or more in length and pots of suitable size should be used. The plants require abundant food and copious amounts of water when well established. Even when out of flower the plants are attractive.

Watch for mildew and other fungus disease. The standard spray is Bordeaux mixture and sulphur dust for rust and mildew. Remove deadwood from shrubs and trees. It is easy to distinguish while the leaves are on the plants.

CHURCH BEGINS BOND DRIVE FOR POST-WAR CENTER

Lake Bluff Sets Goal of $112,500.

Lake Bluff has launched a 30 month fund raising campaign to make certain that construction of its Grace Community center and church will not be delayed after the war.

When priorities put an end to plans for building this summer, church leaders and community committee members hit on the plan of raising $112,500 in war bonds which would have a maturity value of $150,000, the amount needed for the total construction job.

"In this way," says the Rev. Truman W. Potter, pastor of the church, "we will at no time be burdened with a mortgage."

Lake Bluff needs a community center badly, according to the Rev. Mr. Potter. During the summer months, it has its beach, its tennis courts and its park property.

No Entertainment Facilities.

But in the early spring, fall and winter, Lake Bluff residents must leave the village for entertainment. The Men's Bowling league travels to North Chicago, Highland Park or other towns in order to bowl and hold tournaments.

The Community center will remedy this situation it will provide a fellowship hall where 300 neighbors may eat together, hear a lecture, or enjoy a play presented by local drama enthusiasts. There will be four bowling alleys for boys, girls, men, and women, three game rooms for adults and children, a large parlor with a fireplace for club and committee meetings headquarters for the scout troops will be opened to all Lake Bluff residents.

Chimes for Servicemen.

The church, which will be reserved for members of Grace congregation, will contain a sanctuary, chancel, choir loft, vestry, chapel, study and office. The tower of the church will be dedicated to the men in the community who have served with the armed forces, and its chimes will ring nightly as a tribute to them.

James F. Stiles Jr. is general chairman of the drive, and Philip L. Speidel, treaurer. Members of the building committee include Charles F. Campbell, Charles G. Clark, Theodore Cavins, Dr. Edward DeLong, Phillips Keenan, Edgar K. Lofton, Paul Heerens, David D. Stiles, Robert Sedgwick, and the Rev. Mr. Potter.

Open Evanston Art Studio Sept. 2 for Service Men

The Evanston Art center and market has announced that beginning Sept. 2 their studio at 528 Dempster street would be open to service men interested in painting and drawing. Sketching and painting materials will be provided, and the young men will be invited to remain for studio suppers served by Art Center officials.

"Guess My Age!"

New Kind of Face Powder Makes Her Look Years Younger!

ONCE THIS lovely girl looked quite a bit older. Some people actually thought she was approaching middle age...

For she was the innocent victim of an unflattering shade of face powder! It was a cruel shade—treacherous and sly. Like a harsh light, it showed up every tiny line in her face—accented every little skin fault—even seemed to exaggerate the size of the pores.

But look at her now! Can you guess her age? Is she 21—30—35?

She has found her lucky shade of face powder! She has found the shade that really flatters her skin—makes her look young and enchanting.

How old does your face powder say you are?

Are you quite sure the shade of face powder you use is exactly right for you? Are you sure it doesn't lie about your age—that it doesn't say you're getting a bit older?

Why take that chance? Why not find your lucky shade—the shade that makes you look your youngest and loveliest?

You can—without guesswork and without cost! Send for the 7 new shades of Lady Esther Face Powder. Try them one after another—let your mirror tell you which is the perfect shade for you!

WAR HITS STAFF OF DOCTORS AT N. U. DISPENSARY

But Clinics Still Handle 300 Cases Daily.

Every day more than 300 persons who need, but cannot afford, a doctor's care are treated in the Northwestern university medical school dispensary, 747 Fairbanks court. Relief of suffering is a vital by-product of the 14 clinics within the dispensary, whose main purpose is to provide examples for teaching the students.

The dispensary is staffed by 540 doctors who also teach in the medical school. Outstanding specialists in their own fields, these doctors who work part time, donate their services to the medical school. Their only return for the hours they give from their private practices is the research opportunities the school's laboratories offer.

The war has had a triple effect upon the dispensary. The character of the patients has changed. There is a severe shortage of doctors. Because of priorities, equipment cannot be expanded or even replaced.

Operating at Capacity.

The dispensary is operating at close to capacity, but fewer patients on relief are treated. Now, most of the patients are receiving wages altho too small to afford expensive medical care. Those who attend the clinics are usually too ill to hold regular jobs.

Northwestern university almost completely finances the work of the dispensary, altho some funds are received from the Council of Social Agencies and from benefits of university clubs. Some of the patients pay a nominal admission fee, and those who can afford it, pay part of the cost of the drugs they receive.

An old man, who comes in every day bringing the staff pails of flowers from his garden on the other side of the city, demonstrates the work of the dispensary doctors. A cancer patient, he goes to the tumor clinic. Here 25 or 30 patients each afternoon receive X-ray, radium, or surgery treatments, and in some cases, a combination of all three.

Produce Startling Cures.

Thru early diagnosis and research developments in medicine, this clinic has been able to produce some startling cures. Many badly frightened cancer patients have been able to return to work. Like a private doctor, the clinic follows up each cured cancer patient to check that there is no recurrence of the growth.

Despite the recent publicity given cancer symptoms, some advanced cases are still received at the clinic. All possible attention is given these hopeless cases.

Records Are Kept.

When the patient enters the dispensary for the first time, he must fill out a form to indicate that he could not otherwise afford a doctor's care, and another form that he is willing to appear before medical classes. He then goes thru the diagnostic service, and it is decided which clinic he should attend. In the clinic he is assigned a physician who, like a family doctor, is in complete charge of his treatment. In subsequent visits, he makes appointments to see that doctor. A comprehensive record is kept of his ailments, his visits, and the treatment he receives.

The use of the dispensary to the medical school has decreased because of the war. In the curriculum, more emphasis is placed on gas warfare, wounds, and shock treatment, and tropical diseases. The majority of the research work also has been converted into military medicine. No cases which could be used as examples for these classes come to the dispensary.

128 Doctors in Service.

Northwestern university has sent two medical units into the army and one into the navy. More than 128 of the school's doctors are now in the armed forces. Eliminating vacations, the medical courses have been speeded up to completion in three years instead of four, with one year's interneship. Nearly all of the students will get commissions in the army or navy when they finish their studies.

However, the dispensary goes on serving the sick who must consider a doctor a luxury. What the dispensary means to these people was expressed by a girl who had been blind all her life. A part of her sight restored, she thanked the doctor for showing her how blue was the sky.

Picnic lunches for the service men will be provided by members of the Fort Dearborn club. Hot coffee, tea or chocolate will be furnished by the club for 10 cents per person, with no charge to service men. The dime also will include a small amount per person necessary to cover rental cost of the pavilion which is owned and maintained by the municipality of Glen Ellyn.

CORPORAL SENDS HIS PHONOGRAPH TO ALASKA BASE

With the compliments of Corp. Wright Jackson of Fort Sheridan, an army unit stationed in Alaska will soon be playing "Jingle, Jangle, Jingle" on a handwinding phonograph. Corp. Jackson already has sent two other phonographs to USO centers in the middle west.

His wealth of phonographs, which most people can't buy for love or money, is the result of a newspaper story about the hard to wake Jackson, then a private. A borrowed phonograph playing "Wake up, Wright. The sun is shining and there are pancakes for breakfast," used to be necessary to get him up every morning. Three sympathetic sleepers sent him phonographs so that he wouldn't have to borrow a machine to play his wake up smiling record.

But Jackson has become a corporal and no longer needs even one phonograph. He has a new way of getting to reveille on time. With his newly acquired stripes Corp. Jackson won a whistle of his own, which he prefers to the harsher whistle of his sergeant. Now every morning his sorely tried sergeant, instead of turning on the phonograph record, wakes him up, hands him his whistle, and Corp. Jackson blows the first whistle of the day to waken the rest of the soldiers. Fifteen minutes later the sergeant wakes him again and he blows the warning whistle, gets up and is in time for reveille himself.

Four generations of John James Groligs met when 75 year old John J. Grolig, 6562 North Damen avenue, attended the christening of his great-grandchild, John J. Grolig IV. along with four other great-grandparents and four grandparents. John J. Grolig II. is grandfather while John J. Grolig III. is the proud father of the baby.

OUR TOWN

G. Franklin Richards, 828 Michigan avenue, Evanston, completed a banking career of 44 years when he retired recently as assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Chicago. Starting as a bellboy in 1898, he advanced thru numerous departments to his first executive post in 1924. As assistant cashier during the last year he has handled the sales of millions of dollars in war bonds. Mr. Richards also is known in musical circles, as organizer and director of the bank's choral club, composed of 65 mixed voices, and as choir director at the Episcopal Church of the Advent, Logan Square. For the last several years he has served as treasurer of the Episcopal Church club of Chicago. Early this week he will leave for Lauderdale lake in Wisconsin. He plans to spend his winters on a farm near Waukesha, Wis.

G. Franklin Richards.

Raymond P. Mulvaney, 316 Central avenue, Wilmette, really scored recently when he landed a seven pound four ounce walleyed pike at Big Bass lake near Eagle River, Wis. The fish is on display at Eagle River, where it has been entered in a fish contest.

The American Red Cross awarded silver buttons to four Evanstonians for third time donations to the blood bank. Those achieving this distinction were Joseph B. Mann, William Beier, Virginia Baker, and Thomas R. King.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Silberhorn's 50th anniversary was celebrated recently at a party given by their children at the Rogers Park Masonic temple. The Silberhorns, who live at 5942 North Talman avenue, are the parents of seven children. They have eight grandchildren and one great-grandchild. Their youngest son is a chief petty officer stationed at San Diego, Cal.

New north side Waacs who will report for active duty this month, are Martha Jane Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry M. Smith of Evanston; Vivian A. Gray, 2639 Eastwood avenue, Evanston, and Eleanor Tregoning, 1940 Sherman avenue, Evanston.

"Wilmette was still a prairie when we moved out here," say Mr. and Mrs. J. Edward Maass, who celebrated their golden wedding recently. A large reception for family and friends was given by their son, Herbert J. Maass, in his home at 822 Forest avenue, Wilmette, where the couple had lived for 40 years. Their present address is the Hotel Sovereign, Chicago.

Mr. and Mrs. August Johnson, 3316 Southport avenue, recently were surprised by relatives and friends when they were guests of honor at a special celebration of their 50th wedding anniversary. Both are natives of Sweden. They met and were married in Chicago. They have lived in the city continuously since that time. They had eight children, none of whom survive.

Mr. and Mrs. August Johnson.

Four small boys and girls of Wilmette went to bat for the Red Cross and the USO and were able to raise more than $11 for these agencies by presenting an evening show for their parents and friends. The children were Nancy Newman, Charlotte Vodoz, Craig Richardson, and Eugene Dechambre, and their theater was the home of Nat Kahns, 1510 Highland avenue, Wilmette.

Brown university, Providence, R. I., has awarded a Horace Mann scholarship to Robert W. Allrich, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert D. Allrich, 1347 Scott avenue, Winnetka. The award draws its name from the noted pioneer educator—the leading Brown alumnus of the class of 1819.

OFFER WRITERS' SCHOLARSHIP TO MEDILL SCHOOL

The winning scholarship student may enroll in either a campus fiction course in Evanston or in a Chicago campus evening course. The courses are taught by Frederic N. Litten.

Manuscripts under 2,500 words in length are to be mailed to Annual Conference Scholarship, Medill School of Journalism, Northwestern university, Evanston, before Sept. 1. A sealed envelope accompanying the manuscript should contain the author's name and address, education, where any work has been published, age, and session of conference attended.

Dear Mom:
Well, here I am, at Navy Pier, and doing all right I guess, so far. Course I miss you, but, say, Mom, I've already found a swell place to eat. It's called the "Green Shutters" and that's what it looks like. A little white house with green shutters. And, gee! The food! Fried chicken and gravy and hot biscuits with jelly and a big salad and a real cup of coffee and a hunk of apple pie that'd knock your eye out. Doesn't cost much, either. Am looking forward to your coming so we all can have Sunday dinner together.
Love, Jack.

WAR FLAG TO WESTERN ELECTRIC

STEEL WORKERS POOL CARS; SAVE TIME AND TIRES

Charles Curry works in the machine shop at the Archer avenue plant of Acme Steel company. He resides in Downers Grove. He was working the night shift steadily when his automobile developed a chronic tire condition. He began traveling to work by train, bus and street car, a process which consumed four hours daily.

One day while conversing with his foreman, R. E. Anderson, Curry mentioned his mode of travel. Anderson looked around and found that Laverne Drendel of Lisle drove to work daily, but on the day shift. He found it would be simple for Curry and Drendel to make connections. He arranged Curry's transfer to the day shift. His transportation time has been cut in half.

75 Workers Drive.

Curry isn't Drendel's only passenger. He also drives Frank Pecinka and Russell Mork. Pecinka lives in Berwyn; Mork in Riverside. Many of Acme's employés already are pooling their cars, and more of them are eager to do so. In coöperation with the war transportation board, a survey last week showed that 50 per cent of the plant's more than 600 employés own automobiles. Of this number, 24 per cent or 75 drive to work. Half of these share their automobiles. The others expressed a desire to do the same. The company is working now on a plan to achieve this.

It would be a long ride by bus, train and street car to the Archer works from Harvey so Eugene Hayes, 15704 Lexington avenue; Gaylord Connant, 15716 Lexington avenue, and William Bondurant, 164th street and Turner avenue, have trebled the life of their automobiles. Each drives his car every third day, picks the others up.

Three Pool Riding.

Harry Roos, 7136 Parnell avenue; Joseph Fortino, 7834 Ingleside avenue, and Walter Bickle, 7051 Parnell avenue, use their own cars every third week. The rest of the time they ride in each others. They've found that besides being patriotic and conserving rubber, they're also saving money.

Edward Kleckner, 4831 North Washtenaw avenue, is a new employé in the plan department. He has a car, shares it with Ray McSchill, 3920 North Ashland avenue; Bernice Lohff, 4212 Sawyer avenue, and Evelyn Olsen, 4025 North Albany avenue. He saves his passengers an hour a day. Normally, they'd take three street cars. Kleckner's fellow employés subject him to much good natured ribbing. They tell him they'd be tickled to share their cars, too, if they could get such good looking passengers as Bernice and Evelyn.

Glen Korth, 4441 Altgeld avenue, drives three to work with him daily. They are Charles Berndt, 2325 North Harding avenue; Lewis Tynus, 2505 North Spaulding avenue; Julius Masco, 1411 Adams street, and Joseph Canna, 7717 Dobson avenue.

Helps Train Riders.

Workers in the corrugated fastener department have worked out a plan whereby they drive every third week. The participants are Richard McCallum, 1214 East 73d street; Joseph O'Neill, 7746 Greenwood avenue; Dan Knight, 7324 University avenue.

Kenneth Coe, 2024 Sunnyside avenue, a machine shop worker, sees to it that four of his co-workers make connections with their trains and buses. He drives Clarence Neslund, 808 Wilson avenue; Harry Nelson, Evanston; William Cook, Harvey, and Herbert Garity, Hazelcrest, to their depots.

Anton Petrasek, Berwyn; Jerry Reis, Oak Park, and William Taylor, Maywood, all drive daily to a central point, Jerry's home, where they then take turns driving their respective cars to the Archer avenue plant. Jerry worked out an eight week schedule, where he and Bill drive three weeks each, and Tony drives two.

Each group works out the financial end of the deal himself. Some of the men who drive their cars pass up any remuneration. Others collect a dime from each one for the gas and upkeep. Others keep the driver in cigarets. It's been working fine, the employés said.

32 WOMEN END WAR JOB COURSE AT ILLINOIS TECH

Miss Mary Baxter, 4350 Congress street, is one of 32 women in the last graduating class in ordnance inspection from the Illinois Institute of Technology who will soon be "warriors" on Uncle Sam's production front. The class brings to 227 the number of women ordnance inspectors trained in the last year and a half by Illinois Tech—the first school in the nation to offer technical war courses for women. These women, who compose two sections of ordnance inspectors, have studied for 10 weeks in full time courses and will enter service immediately.

Five Street Car Veterans Keep Home Fires Blazing as 20 Sons Go to War

The hours while they wait to go on duty are never dull for the "boys" at the Kedzie-Van Buren car barns. There's a large recreation room, where the men congregate for a game of pool or a few good Irish songs. The Thompsons are famous for their "musical evenings," so Conductor Albert F. Thompson pounds out a tune while Motorman Patrick Callaghan, left, and Conductor Peter Golden try for a little close harmony.

Pvt. Donald V. Ryan. | Pvt. Thomas F. Ryan. | Sergt. William Golden. | Pvt. Martin J. Golden.

Pvt. Robert R. Golden. | Pvt. Peter J. Golden. | Corp. John Callaghan. | Corp. Bert Callaghan.

Here are 12 of the sons helping to carry on the tradition that every Irishman loves a fight.

Before an open window on the broad front porch of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fredrick F. Wallace, 1153 South Wenonah avenue, Oak Park, sits "Cookie," the reticent robin, perched on the back of a glider. All she does is sit, and eat, and sleep.

Free to go where she might choose for the last month, Cookie picked the luxurious life of the Wallace porch voluntarily, preferring the choicest worms from the Wallace war garden, served regularly, to the freedom waiting beyond the open window. She makes friends easily, with humans. But she smirks disdainfully at other birds which frequently attempt to woo her into the great outdoors.

Found on a neighboring lawn with a broken leg and a broken wing, Cookie became a member of the Wallace household in mid-May. Under the care and guidance of 6-foot, 200-pound Mr. Wallace, a block captain who has been trained in the use of splints and bandages, the broken members were healed, and the bird learned to fly and feed herself.

"Today her only handicap is a somewhat bedraggled rudder," according to Mr. Wallace. "But how in the world do you get rid of a robin?"

Paragraphs About People You May Know

CHAIRMAN of judges for the short story contest being conducted currently by the Annual Writer's conference is Miss Phyllis A. Whitney, 1035 South 22d avenue, Bellwood. Miss Whitney's second career novel, "A Star for Ginny," was published this month. The contest awards will be scholarships to short story classes in Medill school of journalism of Northwestern university, and all entries should be addressed there. Stories are to be no longer than 2,500 words, and must be submitted before Sept. 1. They are to be signed by a nom de plume, and accompanied by a sealed envelope containing the correct name, address, and a brief biography of the writer. Those who attended the conference are eligible to submit entries.

JAMES E. JENKINS, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Jenkins, 938 North Kenilworth avenue, Oak Park, has been awarded an activity scholarship to Methodist university for the 1942-'43 session, A. C. Zumbbrunnen, dean of students, announced. Mr. Jenkins, who will enter his sophomore year this fall, is majoring in business administration.

Mrs. Henry O. Ramsey and her stepbrother, Alan McFarlane of Oak Park, and Mr. McFarlane's daughter, Miss Kathryn R. McFarlane of Charlottesville, Va., were recent visitors to French Lick Springs, Ind., en route to Miss McFarlane's home. Mrs. Ramsey's husband is American consul to Manchester, England. She came to America shortly after the blitz in December, 1940.

If it's keeping fit that every one should be, then Motorman John Ryan is not the man to be neglecting the job. Here Ryan gets set for a few "miles" on one of the stationary bikes in the recreation hall.

Oak Park Youth Awarded Scholarship at Brown U.

Robert T. Craig, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence A. Craig, 1104 North Humphrey avenue, Oak Park, has been awarded the John Hay scholarship at Brown university.

5 Street Car Vets Have 20 Fighting Sons

The fighting Irish out at the Kedzie-Van Buren street car barns have in their midst a quintet to be proud of. Five of the "boys," each in the surface lines employ for more than 25 years, have an aggregate of 20 sons in the armed forces.

From Hawaii to Iceland, from England to Oregon, the boys are stationed on battleships and at army air fields. Sergeants and corporals and petty officers, to a man they're out to uphold the Irish reputation for coming out on top in a scrap.

The Ryan boys would almost make up a squad themselves. Five of them now are in the army. Their father, John Ryan, is a motorman on the Van Buren street line and has behind him 25 years and 5 months of service. The family home is at 3219 Flournoy street.

Eldest Is M. P.

The eldest, Pvt. Donald Ryan, 26, is stationed with a military police corps unit at Camp Hayes, Ohio. Staff Sergt. John Raymond Ryan, 24, is with an army medical detachment in Iceland; Sergt. Edmund Daniel Ryan, 22, is with the ground crew of an air corps unit in England; Pvt. Thomas Francis Ryan, 20, is with the infantry at Camp Livingston, Louisiana, and Pvt. Herbert James Ryan, 23, the last of the brothers to go, was inducted into the army only a few days ago.

Two of the men have four sons each in the army and a fifth to go soon. Motorman James Byrom came over from County Tipperary when he was only a lad, just as John Ryan did. Today Mr. and Mrs. Byrom live at 4420 North Wilcox street and he has had 30 years of service with the surface lines.

The Byroms spent an anxious three months after Pearl Harbor, before they heard that their youngest, Pvt. Michael P. Byrom, 19, was safe. He was stationed with a field artillery

ARMY AND NAVY AWARD E RATING TO ALL IN PLANT

Workers to Receive Pins Thursday.

The army-navy E award, highest military honor granted for achievement in the industrial field, will be formally presented Thursday to employés and the management of Western Electric Hawthorne works in a special outdoor ceremony. The announcement is made by the Hawthorne works labor-management committee. Western Electric is one of the first companies to receive the joint E award, which consists of an E banner to be flown beneath the American flag, and lapel pins for all employés.

Symbolic of "excellence in the production of war materials," the award has been granted to all Western Electric manufacturing locations, including main plants at Kearny, N. J., and Point Breeze, Md., as well as in Cicero. Officials believe that employés at the three plants total the largest number of workers so far to receive the award.

C. F. Scheel of La Grange, head of the Hawthorne works labor-management committe, said virtually all of the thousands of employés of the Hawthorne plant will be in attendance Thursday at the Chicago E flag presentation. Gen. R. B. Colton, representing the undersecretaries of the war and navy, will make the presentation to David Levinger, vice president and Hawthorne works manager.

Levinger to Speak.

Miss Dorothy O'Brien of Elmhurst, Hawthorne works 1942 Victory Girl, aided by attendants, will raise the flag in the plant's outdoor recreation center. It will fly alongside the treasury department's blue Minute Men flag and the ordnance department flag, previously won by Hawthorne works.

Mr. Levinger will make a brief address accepting the award. C. H. Flax, president of the Western Electric Independent Labor association, will accept the award in behalf of the employés.

Gen. Colton will then present E pins to a representative group of employés. After the ceremony a pin will be awarded to each employé in recognition of individual efforts in the company's war production program.

Other Plants to Participate.

With the main ceremony scheduled for 2:45 p. m. at Hawthorne works, similar ceremonies will be held at the company's smaller manufacturing plants in the Chicago area. Gen. Colton's address will be carried by wire to the widely scattered locations, and each separate plant will be awarded its own E banner. A rebroadcast of the main ceremony will be heard over station W-G-N at 6:45 p. m. Thursday.

In naming the Western Electric company to receive the E emblem, Robert P. Patterson, undersecretary of war, stated in a letter to C. G. Stoll, president, that employés of the company are making "an outstanding contribution to victory."

In peacetime the company manufactures telephone apparatus for the Bell system, but has been carrying increasingly heavy government orders for military communications equipment, including field telephones, radios for tanks, artillery, and torpedo boats and many other specialized devices.

List Basis of Award.

By coincidence the E award came to the company on the 25th anniversary of a demonstration by Western Electric engineers of two-way radio telephone between ground and airplanes.

President Stoll's formal acceptance of the award revealed that the company's sales to the government during the month of July almost equaled those for the entire year of 1941.

Army and navy boards for production awards have announced that both quality and quantity of production "in the light of available facilities" are the main factors in selecting winners of the joint army-navy E banner.

Among other factors considered are the overcoming of production obstacles, avoidance of work stoppages, maintenance of fair labor standards, training of additional labor forces, effective management, record on health, accidents, sanitation and plant protection, and utilization of subcontracting facilities.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

There are long weeks ahead when exterior painting of a house is possible. For centuries home owners have known that paint improves the appearance of a house and protects it from attacks of fungus growth and decay, but now we also are aware that paint gives a wood house an added degree of fire protection. And the same holds true for a wood shingle roof.

We are told by paint experts who have made practical tests that a single coat of paint to the wooden walls of a house will raise its flame resistance to a definite degree. Of course some woods ignite more easily than others, but all woods are given more fire protection by paint, and while some paints put up a stiffer resistance to fire than others, all paints possess a certain ability to defy flame.

Aids Defense Plans.

Any type of fire resistance we can give to our houses now to make them safer for the duration is a gift to national defense. While we are inspecting our houses to keep them in repair for the year ahead, it would be well to check on ways to make them safer from fires.

We should examine first of all the danger spots where fires start and see if we cannot put them in better shape. These spots can be found from cellar to attic, all thru the house.

The need is imperative now to clear out all junk from the attic; all rubbish catchall piles with their rags, papers, magazines, and clothing. They are a potential menace. Spontaneous combustion has caused more fires than most people know, and even the ink in old newspapers can start a devastating fire. Moreover, if furniture must be stored in an attic it should not be jammed close to the roof, but spaced out. Remove basement junk.

Some Safety Resolutions.

Fire-retard the basement ceiling.

Make sure your heating plant isn't going to start work this fall in an ailing state. Defective heating plants are one of the biggest single causes of fires.

Have your electric wiring checked by a licensed electrician if your house is old and its wiring is not according to present standards.

Place fire-stops of incombustible material between studs in the walls at floor levels if your house is constructed with hollow spaces in the walls which run from attic to cellar.

Protect or move pipes that are too near wood. Smoke pipes should be at least 18 inches from any wood.

Paint your roof if it is an old wooden shingle one and thus give it a chance to put up a fight against sparks from your own chimney or your neighbor's.

Monday, Aug. 24

Evergreen planting should be done in September as the plants require an earlier start than decidious shrubs. There is a wide variety from which to make a selection. For background use and screening the white pine, Norway spruce, and Colorado green spruce are excellent.

Tuesday, Aug. 25

Pot strawberries can be planted. They will give a small crop next season. Give privet hedges the final trimming. Plant madonna lilies as soon as they can be obtained. No more than 2 inches deep. Crocuses are excellent in the rock garden and should be planted early.

Harvest onions when the tops turn yellow, dry in the sun, and store in low boxes in a cool place. Perennials started in June and July should be transplanted to permanent quarters at this time to give them time to gain a firm start before freezing weather.

Wednesday, Aug. 26

Remove all seed formations from plants, unless the seed is wanted for propagation purposes, because much strength is required to produce it. Prepare the soil for peonies sometime before planting to allow it to settle. Make the holes deeper than the plants are to go in and use rich soil for peonies are gross feeders.

Thursday, Aug. 27

Cut out all suckers on grafted shrubs and roses. Gardeners should visit other gardens and note plants and methods that may be used and if a permanent record of garden operations is kept it will be of great reference value in future years. Try potting a lily for Christmas flowering.

An application of fertilizer around each peony plant will strengthen it for next season's bloom. The coldframe is a fine place in which to grow a fast crop of lettuce and radishes. Remove old canes from raspberries. Dig a few plants of parsley and pot them; they will supply garnishing material all winter.

Friday, Aug. 28

From now on amaryllis bulbs should be allowed to rest or become dormant. They will start into activity again during winter when they may be watered. Like all plants they require a resting period. Cut back goldenglow severely and it will flower again.

Fall plowing of land intended for vegetable growing next season should be under way.

Saturday, Aug. 29

The calla lily is a fine plant for home use in the winow and it should be potted now. The size of the roots [rhizomes] vary from the small to those 8 inches or more in length and pots of suitable size should be used. The plants require abundant food and copious amounts of water when well established. Even when out of flower the plants are attractive.

LIBRARIAN SEES 'GRAUSTARK' GIVE WAY TO REALITY

Ada Lanquist Ends 36 Year Career.

Back in 1906 it was "Graustark" that all the visitors to the library were asking for. Librarians couldn't keep enough copies of George Barr McCutcheon's novel on the shelves, and Jack London's "Call of the Wild" was well on its way toward becoming the most popular book in the library.

That was the year that Miss Ada M. Lanquist, 844 North Latrobe avenue, first began working for the Chicago public library. People were interested almost solely in novels then, and the more romantic the better, Miss Lanquist recalls.

How Tastes Change.

Readers have come a long way since then. When Miss Lanquist retired this month from her post as head librarian of the Douglas branch at 3353 13th street she had completed 36 years of service in the public library system. Today's most popular books are William Shirer's "Berlin Diary" and Pierre Van Paassen's "Days of Our Years"—nonfiction books whose only romance is the telling of the tale of today.

Miss Lanquist has seen a great deal more than a shift in readers' tastes during the 36 years she has been a librarian. After two years at the central library downtown, in 1908 she was placed in charge of a reading room which later became the Eckhart branch library, at Noble street and Chicago avenue, in a district then primarily Polish.

Teacher of Librarians.

In September, 1914, Miss Lanquist was transferred to the Humboldt Park branch library which had been opened only a year before. Within four months after her arrival the circulation was doubled. She remained as head librarian there until November, 1933.

During the years she spent at the Humboldt branch Miss Lanquist earned a reputation for breaking in more new branch librarians and assistants than almost any other librarian in the city. She combined her love of teaching with her job in this way, and her assistants were soon able to take charge of branch libraries themselves.

From Humboldt branch Miss Lanquist was transferred late in 1933 to the Stephan A. Douglas branch library at 3353 13th street, where she remained until her retirement early this month. The staff at Douglas numbered 23, and Miss Lanquist was proud of the features the library had which were unique among city libraries.

unit at Schoefield barracks, Hawaii. It was the third time the luck of the Irish had meant the saving of his life. Once while he was attending grammar school he was struck by an automobile and another time he fell down the cellar stairs and broke several bones.

Three on West Coast.

The other Byrom boys are all on the west coast—Pvt. John J., 25, with the coast artillery at Fort MacArthur, California; Pvt. Daniel P. with the army air corps at Pendleton, Oregon, and Pvt. James H. with the army signal corps at San Bernadino, Cal. Thomas will go soon, the last of the Byroms to be called.

Conductor Peter Golden, 4820 Haddon avenue, was born in County Mayo. He has been with the surface lines for 30 years and is now on the Madison street run. His eldest son, Pvt. Peter J. Golden, is probably now on foreign soil, for the last the Goldens heard he was with his air corps unit, awaiting orders at San Francisco, Cal.

Sergt. William F., 24, is with the army at the Ordnance Officers Training school at Aberdeen, Md. Pvt. Martin J., 22, is with the same air corps unit as his brother Peter at San Francisco. Pvt. Robert R. is also in the air corps, attending radio school now at Scott field, Ill. The youngest Golden registered only recently.

Invents Mercury Bullet.

Conductor Albert F. Thompson, 2728 Van Buren street, is the only one of the "boys" who was born in this country, but both his parents came from the Emerald Isle. His eldest son, Pvt. Donald Thompson, 28, is an aviation mechanic stationed at Jefferson barracks, Missouri. He has won considerable recognition for his patent on plane ignitions, now being used by the government, and for a mercury bullet he invented.

Another son, Pvt. Philip Thompson, 32, was one of three men chosen out of 1,600 to attend a special training course and is now an aviation technician at Lambert field, Missouri. Chief Petty Officer Harold Thompson is connected with the officers' personnel at Great Lakes and Petty Officer Second Class Leo Thompson is in the service school there.

Motorman Patrick Callaghan, who came to Chicago from County Roscomman, resides at 4149 Monroe street and has been with the surface lines for 25 years. His eldest, Pvt. Cornelius J. Callaghan, 30, is with an anti-tank company at Fort Benning, Georgia; Corp. Bert P. Callaghan is with a quartermaster company at Camp Stewart, Georgia, and Corp. John J. Callaghan is in an engineers company at Camp Forrest, Tennessee. Cornelius and Bert enlisted together and were stationed in Virginia for their year's training at the same camp. They were separated only a few months ago.

Father of Five.

A sixth trainman, Mike Sheehan, from County Kerry, who has been with the surface lines for 32 years, has two sons in the service, Sergt. Eugene with the army at Pomona, Cal., and Pvt. Patrick, air corps radio student at Scott field. A third son, Edward, will go this month and two more, Joseph and John, are of draft age and due to be called soon.

There has been no official census of the total number of sons in service of all the trainmen at the Kedzie-Van Buren car barns. But of the 870 men employed at the station, approximately 750 are Irish. And if the average is only half so good as the Goldens and Ryans and Byroms boast, there should be an impressive number of battling young Chicago Irishmen stretched across this nation's fighting fronts.

BOYS DISCOVER WORK IS FUN AS THEY MAKE CAMP

Pompeii Parish to Have Dedication Today.

"This is better than regular camps, 'cause here we get to wash our own dishes!" Curly haired little Frank Calabrese, 12, was earnestly enumerating the advantages of the Pompeii Boys' camp over the camps with more elaborate layouts. He knew what he was talking about—he is a veteran of two camping sessions.

"Other places they got servants to wait on table," he added. "That's sissy! Here we guys wait on ourselves. We get to help clean the brush away from the front lawn, too, and make our place look neat!"

It isn't any real love of work that makes the small Italian boys who attend Pompeii camp so enthusiastic over their chores. Back in the city they are just as apt to skip work and make for the nearest sandlot ball game as any other boy between 10 and 16.

Work Shows Results.

But out at camp, in a place of their own, they are able to see what can be accomplished by a few hours of hard work. It isn't so tough to work for an hour in the heat, when you have a cleared space and a big pile of brush to show for it once you're thru.

When the camp site was bought last year, its 44 acres were covered with hickory and poplar, with tangled underbrush thick with wild blackberry and buckbrush and a liberal sprinkling of poison ivy. The older men in the parish of Our Lady of Pompeii church, 1224 Lexington street, joined forces to make the clearings and erect the first buildings.

Now there is a neat little farmhouse on Monee road, just off the Sauk trail, four miles west of Chicago Heights. Past the farmhouse a narrow road winds back into the woods. There, in a clearing, is the mess hall—nothing more nor less than two old portable school buildings joined as one large structure. It cost the West Side Community council, 1035 Polk street, sponsoring agency, more to move the buildings out to the camp than it did to purchase them, but even so the cost was small.

Wagon a Tool Shed.

An old milk wagon, bought for $7, lost its wheels and became a toolhouse. Secondhand lumber was used in two of the cabins, and a third has just been completed from new lumber donated by the Rev. Benjamin Frank of Mount Carmel church. In the cabins are steel double decker beds, bought secondhand for 75 cents each. The mattresses are straw ticks, donated by one of the housewives in the parish.

Before the summer is over, 140 boys from the crowded areas of the 20th ward will have enjoyed a week of sunshine and fresh air at Pompeii camp. Next summer, if expansion plans go forward, that number will be increased to 400.

Today will be one of the big days at the camp—for the Rev. Remigio Pigato of Pompeii parish will be present to celebrate the mass which will dedicate the camp. The boys have built a 30 foot cross, and it will be erected during the mass, at the entrance to the camp.

Even Likes Oatmeal.

Young Frank Calabrese isn't the only one with a proprietary pride in Pompeii camp. There's Edward D'Adami, 9, the youngest of a recent camp period. He has been in the United States only three years, and as far as he is concerned everything is "verra nice"—food, swimming at the nearby Indian Wood Golf club, the hikes, and the beds. Bob Laino, 10, is enthusiastic over the craft work. Joseph Berlen, 12, works hard for the extra points the boys earn for extra work done to improve the camp, with awards going to the two highest scorers at each session. Frank Lucatorto, 10, likes the breakfasts just about best of all—even including the oatmeal.

There's one thing the boys are unanimous about—the food. Mrs. Edward Herbert, wife of the farmer who is acting as caretaker of Pompeii camp, does the cooking for the boys. Her day is one long session over the stove, but if approval of her cooking is any compensation, she is amply repaid. Mr. Herbert takes care of the three acre vegetable garden, the 55 fruit trees, and the construction work around the camp, such as the installation of a running water system last week. They reside in the farmhouse at the camp entrance.

Leaders of Camp.

Anthony Sorrentino, director of the West Side Community center, has had charge of each of the five day camping periods this summer, and his duties range from carrying the boys to the swimming pool in his car to comforting those stricken by sudden attacks of homesickness. Michael Tristano leads the boys in their sports program.

The last camping period will be turned over to a group of Mexican boys from St. Francis of Assisi church, at the suggestion of Father Pigato. Then, on Labor day weekend, the season will be climaxed by a visit of 25 young men between 18 and 20, for a brief camping session.

The camp is still crude and rustic. The boys have visions, tho, of what they can make of it in a few years. A natural hollow could be dammed up, and springs would fill it for their own swimming hole. There is plenty of space for a dozen cabins, and a baseball diamond. It will take time, and money, but the boys know now what they want.

TEACHING POSTS FILLED THO WAR JOBS LURE MANY

Puffer Replaces 500 in County Schools.

Altho teachers are deserting their profession this year in favor of better wages and easier working conditions in war industries, the office of Noble J. Puffer, county superintendent of schools, is nearly done with the job of listing 6,000 instructors for the new year. Only 50 remained to be hired last week.

Stricter standards for teachers become effective Sept. 1, but the year's staff is expected to be complete before that date, so the higher standards need not apply this year, according to a spokesman in Puffer's office. Some of this year's staff will not have college degrees as required by the new rules, but may have only three years of normal school work. This eased the hiring job. Lowering standards to pre-1938 requirements of only two year normal school degrees has not been necessary.

Hire 500 New Teachers.

The inroads of war thru the draft, enlistments and industry competition are indicated by the fact that 500 new teachers had to be hired this year compared with only 381 last year.

It was emphasized, however, that no shortage of qualified candidates exists. Despite the war, the ratio of women to men teachers will remain at about 20 to 1, as last year.

Most of the remaining shortages are in rural primary schools where transportation is a major problem. Prospective teachers hesitate to use tires in school work when they can save them and get more money in other jobs, it was reported. And where rural teachers used to stay in nearby farmhouses, these rooms are no longer available.

Plan to Aid Bond Sales.

With the teacher problem nearly solved for the general opening on the day after Labor day, Puffer is looking to other problems to be brought on by war in the school year. Already plans have been made for coöperation in sale of war saving stamps, war bonds, and other patriotic activities.

To meet the war emergencies, Puffer has named an advisory committee to decide questions of school war activities.

CATHOLIC SCHOOL PLANS

New courses designed to keep students in touch with the war will be introduced in Catholic elementary and high schools Tuesday, Sept. 8, when 170,000 students return to classes. Msgr. Daniel Cunningham, superintendent of Catholic schools in the Chicago archdiocese, said that the pupils of the elementary upper grades will be given courses stressing the history of the South American countries and the Pacific islands.

Classes in home economics and home nursing will be inaugurated or expanded in Catholic girls' school here. Emphasis in the boys' high schools will be placed on mathematics, mechanical drawing, and scientific subjects.

Keep Same Schedule.

Classes will operate on the same schedule as heretofore, altho arrangements have been made to stagger the hours should it prove necessary.

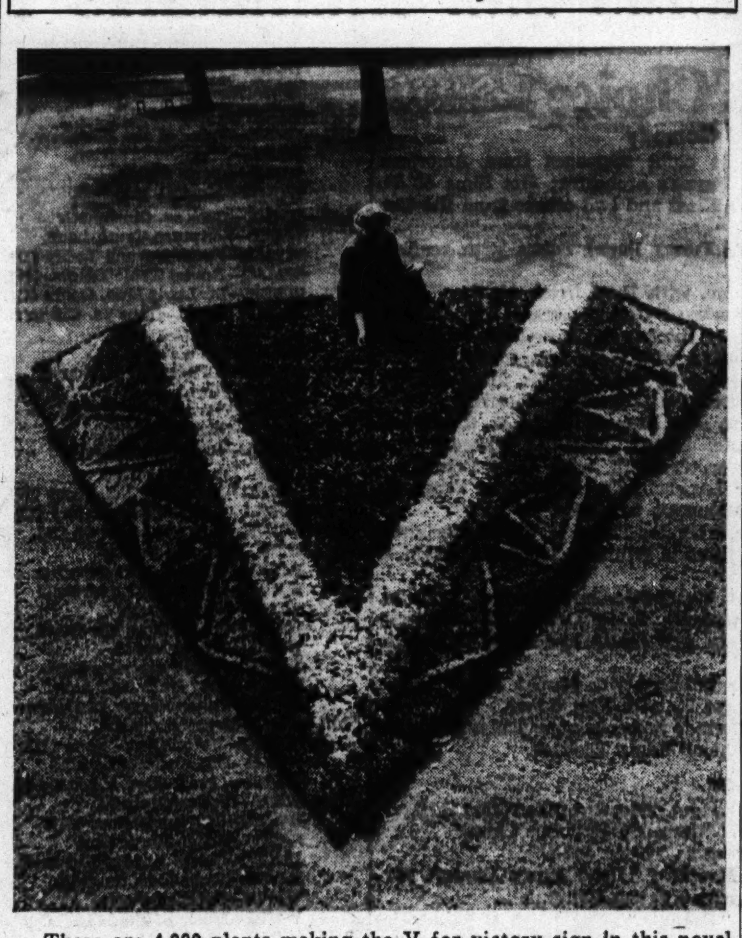
Holy Redeemer school in Evergreen Park is the only new parochial school to be opened this year. St. Augustine's grammar, 5045 Laflin street, and St. Malachy's, 2248 Washington boulevard, have added secondary courses. St. Barbara's, 2859 South Throop street, will abandon its commercial designation and become a regular four year high school. St. Ann's, 1814 South Leavitt street, will start the semester as a four year coeducational high school. St. Felicitas, 1526 East 84th street, will add a two year coeducational commercial course to its program.

Enrollment Decrease Seen.

A decrease of 1,500 in grammar school enrollments is anticipated this year. The approximate enrollment is expected to be 147,591, and high school enrollments are expected to reach 29,195.

Mount Carmel, Catholic south side boys' high school, will introduce a course in aeronautics, a pretraining of aviation cadets in accordance with the army air force's suggestion. The fundamentals of aerodynamics, meteorology, navigation, and civil air rules will be taught.

4,000 Plants in Victory Emblem



There are 4,000 plants making the V for victory sign in this novel flower bed at Ridgeland Commons park, Lake street and Elmwood avenue, Oak Park. Miss Shirley Glaesel, 1129 South Scoville avenue, daughter of Robert Glaesel, trustee of the village of Oak Park, is admiring some of the 11 varieties of plants used in the bed. At its widest point, the bed measures 12 feet, while the V is 15 feet in depth. It was planted by Carl Johnson, park superintendent, and Hans A. Nelson, assistant. Fred L. Comstock is president of the park board of Oak Park.

Du Page to Hire Three Public Health Employes

The Du Page county board has asked the public welfare committee to enlarge the county health department by hiring a physician, sanitary engineer, and a nurse. The candidates will be interviewed by the committee and then submitted to the board. The new health agents will occupy either the nurse's room in the courthouse or one of the cottages on the county farm. Their salaries will be paid by the state.

Tenor and Marion Claire to Join in Duet.

William Hain, tenor, will be the guest Saturday on W-G-N and the Mutual network's "America Loves a Melody" program to be aired from 8 to 9 p. m. He will appear with Marion Claire, soprano star of the concert series.

Hain, who starred for five seasons with the New York Opera Comique, will offer three solo selections and sing a duet with Miss Claire. His solos will be: Lehar's "Love Is a Pilgrim," Speak's "Sylvia," and the serenade from Romberg's "Student Prince." His duet selection with Miss Claire will be Coward's "I'll See You Again."

Miss Claire will also offer three solo selections: "Say Not Love Is a Dream," by Lehar; a special arrangement of "Ave Maria," and Herbert's "Love Is Best of All" from "Princess Pat."

Musical background will be supplied by the W-G-N Symphony orchestra under the baton of Henry Weber and by the chorus directed by Robert Trendler. The orchestra will be heard playing two selections: Weinberger's "Polka" from "Schwanda," and the "Gypsy Dance" from Bizet's "Carmen."

Michael Wilkomirsky, concert master of the orchestra, will play a violin solo of Tschaikowsky's "Melodie." The chorus will sing Lehar's "Carnival" and also will be heard with the soloists.

Two of the selections, "Sylvia" and "I'll See You Again," are drawn from $25 prize winning letters written by members of the radio audience. The story behind the winners' favorite songs will be dramatized on the program.

Kenneth MacGregor, W-G-N chief of production, will be the producer and Marvin Mueller will be the announcer.

ELSON, SAVAGE IN BROADCAST OF ALL-STAR GAME

Bob Elson and Guy Savage, W-G-N veteran sports announcers, have been selected to air W-G-N and the Mutual network's exclusive broadcast of the ninth annual Chicago Bears-College All-Stars football game direct from Soldiers' field from 9 to 11:30 p. m. next Friday.

Elson, who will be broadcasting his ninth straight All-Star game, will give the play-by-play account while Savage will supply the color and background material.

The game is sponsored by Chicago Tribune Charities, Inc., with the proceeds going to the Army Emergency and Navy Relief funds. According to advance estimates, the service charities will receive approximately $160,000 as more than 100,000 persons will witness the game. This crowd will assure the All-Star event first place in sports donations for any single game.

The Bears are champions of the National Professional Football league while the All-Stars were selected in newspaper and radio polls all over the country from the ranks of last season's outstanding seniors.

Bob Zuppke, former head coach at the University of Illinois, will direct the All-Stars' squad of 62 men. His assistants will be Oregon State's Lon Steiner, Texas Aggies' Homer Norton, Northwestern's Burt Ingwersen, and Notre Dame's Frank Leahy. The Chicago Bears are piloted by George Halas, owner-coach.

SEN. TAFT LEADS AIR FORUM STUDY OF WAR FINANCE

Sen. Robert A. Taft of Ohio will lead a discussion on war financing in the American Forum of the Air program over W-G-N, W59C, and the Mutual network from 7 to 7:45 o'clock this evening. Completing the panel will be a labor leader, a treasury consultant, and a corporation executive.

The labor leader is James B. Carey, secretary of the CIO. Prof. Erwin Griswold, special consultant to the treasury department, now on leave from Harvard university, and J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman of the board of directors of Universal Pictures, and chairman of the government finance committee of the National Association of Manufacturers, complete the panel.

Title of the war tax discussion is "Sales Tax? Withholding Tax? What Measures Are Necessary?"

Henry's a Sergeant.

Sergt. Ezra Stone [formerly Henry Aldrich, NBC] is working on a tune tentatively titled "Here's the Sarge, Let's Dodge," and is dedicating it to privates everywhere.

KIWANIANS SEND 300 PENCIL SETS TO SERVICE MEN

Forest Park Boys Are Grateful.

Not only does the Forest Park Kiwanis club stand back of the program for writing letters to men serving with the nation's armed forces, but it is sponsoring a project that will encourage the men in all parts of the world to write letters home. Financed by banquets and movie benefits as well as by the generosity of residents of the suburb, pen and pencil sets valued at $10 each are being sent as gifts to the soldiers, sailors, airmen, and marines.

Thus far more than 300 sets have been mailed to the service men. Receipt of the gifts has been acknowledged, and the men declare them to be an ideal remembrance. More sets are being sent to care for the 400 names listed in the office of the Forest Park Review.

Praised by Magazine.

For its activity, the club has been commended by the national Kiwanis magazine, which speaks of the banquet addressed by Sen. Wayland Brooks at which $700 was raised for the pen and pencil fund. Additional funds were raised at a midnight fun show arranged at the Forest theater.

In making it easier for boys from the community to write home, the Kiwanis club acted upon the suggestion of its members who served with the AEF in the first World war.

For its endeavor, the club is being more than recompensed by letters of appreciation received from recipients of the sets.

Air Cadet Sends Thanks.

"You couldn't have picked a more suitable remembrance," writes Aviator Cadet Roy Mohr Jr., from the air force replacement training center at Santa Ana, Cal.

From Sergt. Richard A. Pelletier of Fort Custer, Mich., comes the message, "I am sure every comrade feels the same way as I do about receiving such a gift. I know you are all behind us and that's what counts. I am sure we won't let our home town down and above all, our country."

Expressing their appreciation for the set, Pvt. John Kracalik of Camp Edwards, Mass., writes that all the boys in his camp are raring to go to fulfill their duty, and Sergt. Paul H. Fischer at headquarters of the 2d marine division declares "freedom forever; win it or die."

A member of the signal corps, John R. Weyrauch writes from Wright Field, Ohio, "wherever I may be sent, your gift will always remind me of the interest and kindness of the Kiwanians and the citizens of Forest Park."

DECLARES HOME DEFENSE STARTS IN CLEAN ATTIC

Professor Says Trash Feeds Fire Bombs.

It was a good thing no bombs fell on the west suburban area during the recent practice black-out in the opinion of Dr. Homer H. Helmick, head of the Elmhurst college chemistry department. Most householders, he said, have yet to take the simplest precautions against the biggest single threat in an actual air raid, incendiary bombs. Dr. Helmick has been experimenting with incendiary bombs at his college laboratory.

"One bomber loaded with magnesium incendiaries, the most common of such bombs, would start between 170 and 200 individual fires in the average community," said Dr. Helmick. "Obviously, the job of defeating the vicious menace is one for each individual home owner."

Clean Out Those Attics.

"Get up into your attics and clean away the inflammable rubbish accumulated there," he said. "It is the fire caused by an incendiary bomb, not the bomb itself, that does the damage.

"There are three common types of incendiary bombs. While there are many other possible kinds, knowing how to recognize three is an important step in combating the fire bomb menace. No expensive fire fighting equipment is required.

Sand Most Effective.

"Sand, for example, is about the simplest and most effective precaution against incendiary bombs. It is a good protection, but some people have covered their attic floors with a blanket of sand, only to have the entire floor collapse under the tremendous weight. If you doubt that sand is heavy, carry a couple of buckets upstairs and see for yourself. Two buckets of sand should be available for incendiary bomb fighting on each of the upper floors in every home.

"Other elementary tools required are a long handled, square nosed shovel and a pair of heavy leather gloves. Some means of fighting the fires set off by the bomb should also be available. A water supply or any commercial extinguisher is good for that purpose."

Reporter Gets Sore Feet First Day.

War conditions have caused the Chicago Recreation commission to remind Chicagoans of the vacation advantages of their city. They have issued a booklet which in other times would have been intended solely for the visitor. A reporter, new to Chicago, has taken the first tour.

BY JOSEPH GREEN.

You'll have an interesting day seeing Chicago the recreation commission way. But you may have to skip the suggested route for the second day until you can recover from the first, unless you are a superman.

Probably you'll feel much better after you've had a hot bath and soaked your feet in hot water for a while and you are likely to go to bed early, even if you have decided you'll just take it easy the next day.

But for the benefit of others who plan to trust a booklet, "Vacationing in Chicago" and follow the suggested program, "Spending Seven Days in Chicago," they should spend some time hardening themselves for the job.

Morning: Take the I. C. or the elevated out to Jackson park and visit the Museum of Science and Industry.

Lunch at the museum or at International house or at the coffee shop on the University of Chicago campus.

Afternoon Program.

Afternoon: Visit the University of Chicago chapel, the Oriental institute, and other campus buildings or nearby churches of interest. Take a No. 1 bus [South Park way, west end of Washington park] north to the loop, transfer to a No. 51 and ride to Devon avenue and Broadway. Nearby are Loyola university and Mundelein college.

Dinner on the far north side.

Evening: Many motion picture theaters, dancing or swimming in this area. Back to the loop by street car, elevated or bus.

After you have trod the marble floors of the Museum of Science and Industry for a couple of hours [and you could spend a day and not see it all] you may feel you have spent enough time improving your mind for one day. You've seen some of Jackson park, with its winding, smooth driveways and the beach and lake beyond.

The scene looks inviting and you'll want to tarry, even tho you know you should be hurrying along to the University of Chicago campus, as suggested. So you'll give in to the lure of the beach, find a bench and just sit. Doing a museum is interesting, but not restful.

But the book says go, and you are going by the book. You walk to a corner restaurant and grab a sandwich and a glass of iced tea. Then doggedly, you get up and leave. You are behind schedule.

Many Races Represented.

At last you find International house. Dinner is served on a stone terrace looking into a quiet court where a fountain splashes. You see that International house really has a meaning. One of the waitresses appears to be Chinese. A woman who comes in with a curly haired Irishman might be Indian, Egyptian or Syrian, but has a pleasant manner and speaks beautiful English. There are others of various races.

You drag yourself away from the pleasant surroundings and again continue your tour of the campus, including the university chapel, the Oriental institute and other buildings, if you have time.

Sailors Parade Midway.

You walk into the chapel and startle a colored soldier and his girl sitting near the door on the back pew. Down front a blonde girl and her instructor are struggling with sharps and flats in a lesson on a big, gold harp.

It's quiet and peaceful. The church is beautiful. You go on, however, to the next stop, and even with a map of the campus you get lost en route to the Oriental institute, only two blocks away.

You must hurry. You walk around, glance at a couple of mummies and a huge statue of King Tutankhamen of Egypt, and view a huge stone statuary bull's head recovered from Persian ruins. Then you buy a pamphlet guide of the museum for 10 cents and decide you'll come back later.

Washington park, next stop, is right over there, some one tells you. Two blocks to the east end, or perhaps three. You are supposed to walk to the west end. You do and learn that this is the Negro section of the city. You see thousands of colored citizens enjoying the park. Several hundred crowd a big swimming pool.

Then you get to the west end and

Portage Park Festival and Exhibit Will Celebrate Success of War Garden

They are bringing in the sheaves out in Portage Park. What was once 27 acres of vacant land in the heart of the community is a bounteous garden now being harvested by the 63 families who planted 30 by 60 plots at a cost of $2 for stakes and seeds. The harvest of the vegetable crops will be celebrated with a festival, weiner roast, a vegetable exhibit and a community sing on Saturday from noon until dusk on the site of the gardens bounded by Cullom, Major, Menard, and Berteau avenues. Mrs. Louise Priebe, 4107 Marmora avenue, has won a prize already for her garden plot. The prize was $5 in defense stamps from the Portage Park Kiwanis club. Mrs. Priebe has $100 worth of vegetables either canned or ready for canning. Mrs. Walter F. Palmer, 4217 Mason avenue, smiles from her prize cabbage patch. The size of the cabbage and the redness of the tomatoes is a sensational surprise to the gardeners who in other years confined their planting to a row of dahlias in front of the garage. Capable chairman of the whole project is Mrs. Pearl Ott, 4107 Marmora avenue, who kneels down to pick herself a peck of pickled peppers.

In they come with the harvest. Baskets, wagons, and shopping bags go into the garden plots and come out overflowing with everything from buckwheat to watermelons. Mrs. Suzan Ressler, 4153 Marmora avenue, is helped at harvest time by her grandson, Robert. Baby Joy Champners, 4105 Marmora avenue, is helping her neighbor, Mrs. Anne Reinert, 4125 Major avenue, to bring home the luscious burden.

Into the canning pot is the fate of the fruit. The younger housewives swear by the pressure cooker method and the older ones still cling to the open pot method of canning. A few cling to the cold pack way of putting up the vegetables. Mrs. Walter Blazek, 5744 Cullom avenue, looks on as her neighbor, Mrs. George Hubka, brings her green beans out of the pressure cooker. Fascinated by this storing up for winter is daughter, Barbara Jean Hubka. Mrs. Walter Werner, 5714 Cullom avenue, is exchanging canning hints with Mrs. Edward Kulik (right), 5718 Cullom avenue.

2 NORWOOD PARK GIRLS ARE CITED FOR DRAMA WORK

Miss Margaret Lou DeVaney and Miss Shirley Johannsen of Norwood Park received silver medals recently for their performances in plays presented last year by Resurrection High School Playshop. Miss DeVaney received the highest count in the spring play, "The Moonstone" which the audience and faculty voted as best performance of the year. Miss Johannsen was voted the most valuable player for the year.

Eight other players receiving honorable mention were Margaret Mary Fenlon, Marilyn Pfister, Josephine Bujak, Florence Lis, Pelagia Rzepczynska, Dorothy Zieman, Gertrude Buczinski, and Margaret Mary Billeck. They were selected by a ballot of Playshop members, faculty, and audiences.

The Playshop is directed by Miss Coryl Schumann. Resurrection High school is a Catholic school for girls at 7432 West Talcott avenue. The girls were assisted in their plays last year by boys from St. George High school in Evanston.

They set up a lemonade, popcorn, and candy stand at 6030 Neva avenue, and had a $2 profit after paying their operating expenses. The young business men and women are Eurie Jane Volling, 10 years old, 6034 North Neva avenue; Jenine Rex, 9 years old, 6030 North Neva avenue; Caryl Anda, 10 years old, 6126 Nickerson avenue; and Richard Rex, 8 years old, 6030 North Neva avenue.

Nebraskan Assumes Post as Head of Maine High

Frank Holmes, superintendent of schools in McCook, Neb., for the last three years, has assumed his duties as new principal of the Maine Township High school. He was graduated from the University of Kansas and received a master's degree from Northwestern university in 1937. He has done graduate work at the University of California and has almost completed his work for a doctor's degree at the University of Nebraska. Holmes also attended a summer session a few years ago at the London School of Economics in England.

John Gordon Has 150,000 OCD Helpers

One hundred and fifty thousand reasons for the success of the Aug. 12 trial black-out is found in the patriotism of the Northwest community of the Civilian Defense organization, where that many people are coöperating with John C. Gordon, community commander, who is running his office without ever collecting funds. Eleven hundred persons in this area have been graduated from the air raid training class and 750 more will begin the course tomorrow at Pulaski park, Nobel street and Potomac avenue.

The zone captains from the 54 zones in the community who take the air raid training class have already completed their survey, first aid, fire and gas courses. Michael Rachwalski from Northwestern university settlement is in charge of the training.

Includes Goose Island.

The Northwest community OCD serves the territory from Kinzie street to Armitage avenue and from Oakley boulevard to and including Goose island. It embraces 496 blocks with eight or ten blocks to each zone.

Since civilian defense does not operate in industrial areas, it was first thought there would be no zone established in Goose island, primarily industrial. However, Mr. Gordon, who knows this neighborhood, interested the 300 residents of the island in joining the organization. These residents proved invaluable during the trial black-out. They reported the lights on railroad tracks and other illumination that had been overlooked.

Five Free Rental Offers.

There are 30 nationalities represented in the Northwest community with a high percentage of Polish families. Mr. Gordon found them so patriotic that no money had to be collected for maintenance of the civilian defense office. When the office was established he was offered five locations, rent free, for headquarters. He chose the office at 1451 West Superior street, because it is in the center of the community. All the office equipment, chairs and tables were loaned or donated by business men in the area. When there is a need for mimeographed notices and letters, social and civic organizations in the community take turns doing the work and supplying the materials.

Need More Office Help.

The Polish Alma Mater, the Polish National alliance and Polish women's organizations have contributed their time, as have every church and club in the area. This week, Mr. Gordon is sending out another SOS for office help. There are 18 young women who serve without pay in the office.

The block captains in the zones are requested by Mr. Gordon to send in the names of all the boys in their blocks who are serving in the armed forces. The names will be received at headquarters and, when all block captains have reported, the names will be inscribed on a huge plaque to be hung on the civilian defense office wall.

Interpreter at Meetings.

Mr. Gordon says, "I expect that this plaque will hold almost five thousand names. I know that there are from 15 to 20 boys in service on one side of the street in many of our blocks."

One of the block captains in the Northwest community introduced a practical idea at his last meeting. He is Marion Swiderski, 1103 North Winchester avenue, head of block 3, zone 27. "Since my people are mostly Polish speaking," he said "we have an interpreter who comes to the meetings to review the high points in the Polish language."

Example of Democracy.

Albin Szczurek, 1141 North Damen avenue, is one of the newer captains to take over the work. He was unanimously elected last week for block two, zone 27.

Northwest community's OCD has a record place in the city as an example of democracy at work. "We strive for efficiency," says Mr. Gordon, "and the vast number of residents who hold certificates stating that they are trained for any emergency, shows the extent of the coöperation of 30 nationalities working to safeguard their American community."

UNFURL SERVICE FLAG SUNDAY AT CHILDREN'S HOME IN BENSENVILLE

A service flag for its alumni in the armed forces will be dedicated next Sunday at the annual open house and festival of the Evangelical Home for Children and Aged in Bensenville. The flag has 14 stars, one for each of the service men, two of whom have been reported missing.

Dr. W. H. Schlinkmann of Milwaukee will give the afternoon address at 3 o'clock. Music will be provided by the Century Male chorus, featured for several years on the Chicago Tribune Forest Preserve Vesper musicales. After the dedication of the service flag the children of the home will present a pageant, "We Live at Bensenville." The pageant was written and directed by Miss Lois Hamer, director of the summer recreation activities at Bensenville.

The Rev. John Goebel of Kankakee, former pastor of Bethel Evangelical church on the south side, and his son, the Rev. J. Paul Goebel of Eden Evangelical church of Chicago, will direct the morning worship service. The Bensenville Community High school band will give a concert in the afternoon. The annual open house is being planned by the Rev. Leslie Poeschel of Lake Zurich and the Rev. George Ellerbrake of Barrington.

43 UNITS PLAN CIVILIAN DUTIES ON HOME FRONT

Mrs. Lyon Heads State Movement.

Northwest side women will become a part of a huge home front army, 200,000 strong in Illinois, when a new Parent-Teacher program for wartime swings into action Sept. 8. Thirty-one Parent-Teacher units comprising the Northwest council and 12 northwest units included in the Midwest council will coöperate in a wartime citizenship and civilian service program designed to defend the state's educational system, the youth and the American culture.

Mrs. F. Russell Lyon.

In charge of civilian service undertakings by the 1,600 Illinois Parent-Teacher associations is a northwest side woman, Mrs. F. Russell Lyon, 6100 Newberg avenue, who has had 15 years of leadership in PTA work. Mrs. Lyon's preparation for her leadership in the huge war job started with her presidency of the local Onahan unit. She became Northwest council president, then first vice president of the Illinois Congress of PTA and then was elected state president. She started her work as civilian service committee director this summer by mapping out the program which all units will follow.

Calls PTA the "Third Army."

Of the new program Mrs. Lyon says, "We parent-teacher people are the third army. There are three armies which will win this war. First, the army of the men in service; second, the army of industrial workers, and third, the army back of these two groups—the home army.

"As members of this third army just what are our duties and what can we do to strengthen our homes and communities which are the strength of America?"

All northwest side units taking part in the civilian service and citizenship plan will coöperate with all agencies such as the Office of Civilian Defense, salvage committees, bonds sales, and the American Red Cross. Next they will reconcentrate on their own health program, the summer round-up, free physical and dental examinations of all children starting to school and health lectures thru the school term.

Winter Courses Planned.

By next winter all PTA units will be offering home nursing courses, first aid courses, consumer education and citizenship courses. Meetings will be devoted to specialists on clothing conservation, the best use of household equipment and materials and how to salvage materials such as metals, old rubber, waste paper, rags, and grease. "When a new need arises," explains Mrs. Lyon, "that need will be placed before the PTA mothers and every woman will be asked to add to the drive."

Because wars have always brought with them an epidemic of some kind all PTA units will study ways to prevent diseases. Physicians will be called in to the meetings to explain immunization and the reasons for all types of vaccinations.

Units will form war garden groups and at the harvest time will exchange notes on how to preserve fruits or vegetables. The school lunch projects will be extended to all children instead of just the underprivileged. The diet kitchen in Peoria will serve as a contact place where school lunch chairmen may write for balanced menus and the best methods of cooking to preserve vitamins.

Books for Service Men.

Book collections for the men in the armed forces will be carried on in all units. Thru social hygiene committees, lectures, and printed materials on the prevention and control of social diseases will be used.

Mrs. Lyon says the parent-teacher units will stand behind every law which restricts the sale of liquor and narcotics. The units are in favor of the recent Chicago council action prohibiting women from drinking at bars.

Another important phase of PTA work in wartime will be the maintenance of educational opportunities in elementary and second schools. Mrs. Lyon explains, "With so much money being spent on war machinery, there may be a tendency to dub educational advantages 'fads and frills.' We are opposed to the curtailment of educational facilities and we are against any proposed shortening of the school term."

Work Already Started.

Even before the state-wide civilian defense program was adopted, a number of northwest units contributed to the war effort. The Irving Park school PTA has been giving dinners in tribute to all the neighborhood men leaving to serve in the armed forces. Last year Ebinger school unit conducted a successful nutrition course. Von Steuben High school unit and Palmer school PTA were high in the sale of bonds and stamps thru the neighborhood coöperating

114 NORTHWEST SIDERS SHARE IN TIRE RATIONING

15 Others Allowed to Buy New Automobiles.

One hundred fourteen northwest side individuals and firms received permits to buy new tires and tubes during the three days ending Aug. 12, rationing board figures disclosed.

When Staff Feted Retiring Librarian

Ada Lanquist Ends 36 Year Career.

Back in 1906 it was "Graustark" that all the visitors to the library were asking for. Librarians couldn't keep enough copies of George Barr McCutcheon's novel on the shelves, and Jack London's "Call of the Wild" was well on its way toward becoming the most popular book in the library.

That was the year that Miss Ada M. Lanquist, 844 North Latrobe avenue, first began working for the Chicago public library. People were interested almost solely in novels then, and the more romantic the better, Miss Lanquist recalls.

How Tastes Change.

Readers have come a long way since then. When Miss Lanquist retired this month from her post as head librarian of the Douglas branch at 3353 13th street she had completed 36 years of service in the public library system. Today's most popular books are William Shirer's "Berlin Diary" and Pierre Van Paassen's "Days of Our Years"—nonfiction books whose only romance is the telling of the tale of today.

Miss Lanquist has seen a great deal more than a shift in readers' tastes during the 36 years she has been a librarian. After two years at the central library downtown, in 1908 she was placed in charge of a reading room which later became the Eckhart branch library, at Noble street and Chicago avenue, in a district then primarily Polish.

While she was librarian there she worked with the eight grade teacher of nearby Motley school, and instituted one of the first library instruction classes in the country. During this period of pioneer work showing grammar school students how to get the most benefit from their public library, Miss Lanquist's classes were visited by Henry E. Legler, then city librarian. Recognizing the merit of the idea, he saw to it that similar classes were soon started thruout the city.

Teacher of Librarians.

In September, 1914, Miss Lanquist was transferred to the Humboldt Park branch library which had been opened only a year before. Within four months after her arrival the circulation was doubled. She remained as head librarian there until November, 1933.

During the years she spent at the Humboldt branch Miss Lanquist earned a reputation for breaking in more new branch librarians and assistants than almost any other librarian in the city. She combined her love of teaching with her job in this way, and her assistants were soon able to take charge of branch libraries themselves.

From Humboldt branch Miss Lanquist was transferred late in 1933 to the Stephan A. Douglas branch library at 3353 13th street, where she remained until her retirement early this month. The staff at Douglas numbered 23, and Miss Lanquist was proud of the features the library had which were unique among city libraries.

Only Foreign Room.

There is, for instance, the only foreign room in any branch library in the city. This was more popular several years ago than it is now—for transplanted foreigners are reading less and less of their native tongue since the war began. Refugees drift in occasionally, however, to scan the foreign language papers.

A decade ago, when she began to think of retiring, Miss Lanquist had her heart set on traveling when she finally had the time. Now that she does have the time there's an end to travel. The freighters she had planned on taking to out of the way ports have disappeared into the sea or now travel furtively in convoys.

So Miss Lanquist will probably enjoy a busman's holiday for the next few years. She'll spend her time and some of the money she saved for travel in building up her own personal library. And she's been so busy handing books out to people for the last several years she hasn't had time to keep up with her reading. There will be time for that now, too.

field, who is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Greenfield, 3233 Thomas street, received his preliminary training at Ellington field, Texas.

Three northwest service men have reported recently at Scott field, Illinois. They are Pvt. William E. Bowers, son of Mrs. Jesse Bowers, 2827 North Kildare avenue; Pvt. Joseph Seitz, son of Mrs. Elizabeth Seitz, 2916 North Kilbourn avenue, and Pvt. Alex E. Bavolek of 5035 Kennison avenue.

Three former ROTC students of Northwestern university actively engaged in the armed forces are residents of the northwest side. Capt. Bernard Thomas Kelly, 4901 North Leavitt street, was graduated from Northwestern in 1940. He received his ensign's commission in the United States naval reserve and was then transferred to the marine corps. Beverly W. Pattishall, Barrington, was graduated from Northwestern in 1938. OUR TOWN

DR. GEORGE MEYER, who for 20 years has had his optometry offices at or near 4712 Lincoln avenue, has inaugurated a new plan for the benefit of the USO. Minor repairs for which there formerly was a minor charge, are now being done by him free, but the customer is invited to drop the amount he expected to pay into a box to be turned over to the USO at the end of each month. Dr. Meyer says so far each person benefiting by the repair work has dropped in a coin and expressed enthusiasm for the idea.

Three Mount Prospect business men recently settled an old argument on who was the best bicyclist. They staged a race down the village's Central avenue. Emil Nerge came up from third position and won the race with Carl Peterson second and Adolph Willie third.

Lagging behind in the race, Merge surprised the spectators by stopping his bicycle to remove his dentures and then immediately traveled to first place. He later told village residents who had watched the race that his teeth had prevented him from breathing fast enough. Peterson prepared for the race by wearing short pants, a small cap and half socks.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Panzer, 6044 North Naussau avenue, have received word of the birth of their first great-grandchild. The baby, a boy, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Victor Gitersanke of Bridgman, Mich. Mrs. Gitersanke is the Panzers' granddaughter.

Sixty-three families in the Portage Park community are reaping what they have sown. For $2 worth of seeds and stakes, some priceless sun tan and an occasional blister, Portage Park housewives have stocked their larders for the winter with canned pickles, red beets, relishes and tomatoes. There are dozens of quarts more vegetables ripening on the vines and on Saturday a harvest festival will be held on the war garden plot bounded by Cullom, Major, Menard and Berteau avenues.

The garden chairman for the Portage Park Civilian Defense organization, Mrs. Pearl Ott, 4107 Marmora avenue, also is reaping the satisfaction of a job well done. It was last May that Mrs. Ott cast her eye on a 27 acre piece of vacant property in the heart of a neighborhood of bungalows and two flat homes. She interested the 63 families in taking over 30 by 60 foot plots and pledging themselves to seed and weed.

Park District Plows Land.

Robert Benson, agent for the property, gave consent for its use for war gardens. The park district plowed the tract. The International Harvester company lent the tractors. Each gardener chipped in to pay for a pipe line to bring them a water supply from a nearby fire hydrant.

The 27 empty acres obligingly sprung into abundant fertility under the hands of the amateur gardeners and now housewives boast they each have $100 worth of canned vegetables stored up against the winter. Mrs. Ott laughs when she remembers her attempts to break ground with her community garden plan.

She knocked on everybody's door and asked if they wanted to be gardeners. Some said "yes" and one slammed the door in her face. One man gave her a half hour lecture on the futility of planting lettuce for the rabbits, and named a score of vegetable pests and reminded her of several blights that could strike down a tomato plant.

Wants Definite Answer.

Mrs. Ott listened, first on one foot and then on another. Finally she burst into the pessimist's tirade. "Listen, Mr." she said, "either say 'Yes, thank you, I want a garden' or 'No, thank you, I don't want a garden.' My feet hurt. I'm hungry. It's hot and I've been tramping around all day. I don't want a lecture. I want a 'Yes' or 'No'."

There were happy things too. Mrs. Ott has become closely acquainted with members of the 63 families. Some of the gardeners were neighbors but never knew each other until they came face to face with the little bugs on their lima beans. Neighbors who had never peeked over their own back yard fences found themselves closely bound by tomato plants or cucumbers.

On Saturday the gardeners will meet for a war garden festival planned by a committee headed by Mrs. Ott and assisted by 108 garden wardens from the local Office of Civilian Defense where Leonard Fuog is commander. By noon exhibitors of vegetables for the grand prizes will have their specimens arranged and labeled. Judges will be members of the Men's Garden Club of Illinois.

Refreshments for 800.

At 6 o'clock the gardeners will light three huge bonfires and will toast weiners and buns which will be served free. More than 800 persons are expected to join in the food, the frolic and the community singing.

There will be a public address system set up over which Ralph Hirschberg, Civilian Defense salvage director; Mrs. Pearl Halversen, executive secretary of the Civilian Defense, Robert Benson, the agent for the property, and Mr. Fuog will address the neighbors and congratulate them on the job well done.

Members of the arrangements committee, in addition to Mrs. Ott, are Mrs. Florence Werner, Mrs. Suzan Ressler, Mrs. Louise Priebe, Mrs. Ann Reinert, Mrs. Rose Kulik, Mrs. Lou Blazek, Mrs. Alba Hubka, George Hubka, Edward Nayrowski, Mrs. Pauline Mall, Mrs. Carl Schnell, Peter Kazcara, Mrs. George Kittise, John H. Hogemann, Mrs. Margaret F. Fisch, Mrs. Marge Parkaus, Mrs Marie Hein, and Mrs. Jimmy Dunn.

Many of the gardeners who will exhibit in the contest Saturday never raised so much as a radish before. They are averaging about 100 quarts of tomatoes each and everything has found its way to the tables by now except the Country Gentleman corn, the muskmelons and the pumpkins.

Mrs. Priebe already has canned seven quarts of beans, nine quarts of spinach and three jars of carrots. Mrs. Reinert has 12 quarts of beets. George Hubka did a great deal of the gardening in that family for Mrs. Hubka has the care of two small children. They have been eating their own potatoes, green beans, green onions, turnips, tomatoes and beets. Mrs. Hubka will put up her pickles, more beets and some green tomatoes.

Mrs. Ott has pulled 88 ripe ears of yellow bantam corn off her two 30 foot rows. She has four rows of Country Gentleman corn not ready yet. She expects to can 100 quarts of tomatoes, 24 quarts of carrots, and will do something with her 48 heads of cabbage. Mrs. Ott, contrary to popular belief, proved you can grow celery in Chicago. All she did was water it a little extra and the Ott family has been munching war garden Illinois celery for weeks.

"What do you do with all the money you save?", Mrs. Ott was asked.

Her answer was immediate. "We all are buying war bonds and stamps," she said, "All of the housewives are taking 10 per cent of their food money for bonds. We must have gardens as a hedge against rising prices to be able to do this."

Five Generations Meet in Barrington

Together 50 Years

Mr. and Mrs. William Magill, 5813 Bernard avenue, recently celebrated their golden wedding with a family dinner in the home they share with their son, Herbert L. Magill. They also have a daughter, Frances Magill Lynch. Mr. and Mrs. Magill have resided in Chicago since 1911 where they moved from Columbus, O.

PUBLIC PARTIES GIVE FAREWELL TO FIGHTING MEN

Belmont Heights Folks Say Goodby to 300.

Belmont Heights civilians have worked out a plan whereby each of their men in service gets a rousing send-off. The plan in which virtually every community citizen takes a part has made possible parties for the more than 300 selectees and volunteers on the eve of their inductions.

The parties are planned thru cooperation of draft board officials, civilian defense workers, and civic groups and are held about every 10 days in the Shabbona park fieldhouse. They are directed by M. B. Schaeffer, chairman of the service men's committee of the Belmont Heights civilian defense office.

Inductees Are Notified.

Names of the inductees are submitted to the OCD office which in turn sends a special delivery invitation to the youth's home. The block captain immediately sends word to the youth's neighbors and relatives in the block.

Each party is almost identical to that of the last one. A program given by radio and theatrical entertainers always is followed by a dance for the selectees, their families, and closest friends. The American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and Boy Scouts plan the program.

Give Away 50 Cakes.

Family groups are hosts and hostesses and the refreshments are donoted bf the community merchants. More than 50 cakes were given at one of the latest parties. Each youth receives a pencil set as a going away gift and a box is always available for parents and friends to drop donations for incidentals at the next send-off.

Belmont Heights, altho exceptionally active, is a small community. The area is bounded by Narragansett, Belmont and Harlem avenues, and Irving Park road.

GUIDE BOOK PLAN TO TOUR CITY IN 7 DAYS IS TOUGH

the first bus that comes along is No. 1. You crawl feebly aboard and drop into the nearest seat. The worst is over. Now you can ride a long way.

You expected to see something of the north side beaches, but it's too late. When the bus gets going along Michigan avenue and the Outer drive you're jammed against a wall and the aisles are full of people.

You see some of Lincoln park, but a fellow with a dirty shirt blocks the view the other way. He's one of the crowd hurrying home from work. You arrive at Devon avenue and Broadway and see towering Mundelein college and the Loyola campus beyond. You're willing to call it a day. Somehow you're willing now to forego the motion picture theaters, dancing and swimming. You hop the first bus back to the loop, heading for the rest and comfort of your home.

You know that Chicago is a big, busy city. You're aware that there are many places of interest, many facilities for recreation. You know you want to see and do dozens of things suggested in "Vacationing in Chicago."

But you'll resolve, also, to take your time about it.

Prayer on Radio.

Rabbi David Graubart, spiritual leader of Congregation B'nai Shalom, 3245 Ainslie street, has written a prayer which will be broadcast at 5 o'clock next Friday afternoon over W-G-N and the Mutual network.

MISSION CAMP SHOWS STRENGTH OF A GOOD IDEA

Minister Finds Way to Meet Problems.

This is one of a series of stories on the war's effects on the city's charitable institutions.

More than 200 of Chicago's underprivileged boys and girls have found a haven this summer at the Missionary summer camp on the shores of Lake Zurich. There they have learned swimming and games, have eaten wholesome food, and played in the fresh air.

The Rev. Carl P. Nelson.

Some of the boys and girls have remained a week at the camp, others two weeks, and a few more lucky have been there all summer. Occasionally a mother and father, destitute and without a home, accompany their children for a few weeks at the camp.

Today's four acre camp with its 150 foot swimming beach, two dormitories, a mess hall, and an office is a far cry from the one floor of rooms rented in a large house at the lake four years ago by the Rev. Carl P. Nelson. He wanted to give 10 or 12 youngsters at a time a chance at a summer outing. His camp, which is supported entirely by individual donations, now can accommodate 40 to 45 campers at one time.

Growing Each Year.

"And it is growing every year," he says. "The war is increasing rather than decreasing our burden. Many more widowed mothers are working and have to find places to put their children during the day."

The case of one little boy who changed from a pale and listless younster to a strong, rosy cheeked lad after a summer in the fresh air at Lake Zurich is only one of many the Rev. Mr. Nelson could cite. This particular boy had lived at home with his grandmother where he had only the alley to play in. A heart condition kept him from joining the other boys in their more rugged games.

Because the other boys made fun of him he spent his time indoors with his grandmother and developed into a personality problem. A summer at the Missionary camp strengthened his heart and taught him to play with other children. He returned home a healthy youngster, ready to take his place in the neighborhood gang.

Only One of Tasks.

The summer camp ties in with the Rev. Mr. Nelson's other work. Chief and founder of the Chicago Missionary society, he feeds and clothes hundreds of families during the year.

The society's headquarters are in the large abandoned Methodist church at Damen and Evergreen avenues. Here people come for food and clothing. Occasionally an evicted family takes up temporary quarters in the church basement.

Donations of clothing, food, and money for the missionary society and the camp are brought to the minister's adjoining office. The war hasn't made any dent in the number of contributions yet and he isn't expecting much decrease.

The camp children are selected by the Rev. Mr. Nelson, his wife, who superintends the camp, and a small staff of volunteer workers. They select the children from relief cases in their own mission. Other churches bring cases to them and various welfare societies often ask them to take children.

May Last Till October.

Camp opens as early as there is need for it and closes in the fall either when no more children come or the weather gets too cold. This year it opened in May for a group of children who could not go to school and needed lots of fresh air and sunshine. The leader expects it to continue thru September and maybe part of October.

Mrs. Nelson is assisted at the camp by Frank Rayner, boys' director and instructor in wood carving; Mrs. John Logue, behavior advisor; Liza Ballard, the Negro cook, and two girl helpers.

The children are taken to the camp by the Missionary society's trucks which are driven by volunteer helpers. These same trucks drive into Michigan and Wisconsin each year to bring back culled fruits and vegetables from farms for Chicago's needy families.

Northwest Side Girl Engaged

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Singer, 1044 North Oakley boulevard, announce the engagement of their daughter, Francine Shirley, to Max Albert Weiser, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Weiser of New York City. Miss Singer attended the University of Illinois and Mr. Weiser was a student at Cooper university. [Schoults Photo.]

Monday, Aug. 24

Evergreen planting should be done in September as the plants require an earlier start than decidious shrubs. There is a wide variety from which to make a selection. For background use and screening the white pine, Norway spruce, and Colorado green spruce are excellent. For foundation planting, the pfitzer juniper, Japanese yew, either spreading or upright types, are very useful, altho the mugho pine, cannart juniper, and savin juniper are quite popular.

Care must be taken not to plant large growing kinds near the house. Selection and location should be carefully studied before ordering for these plants endure for a considerable time. Do not cut back these plants when planting. Japanese and Siberian iris can be divided and planted now.

Tuesday, Aug. 25

Pot strawberries can be planted. They will give a small crop next season. Give privet hedges the final trimming. Plant madonna lilies as soon as they can be obtained. No more than 2 inches deep. Crocuses are excellent in the rock garden and should be planted early.

Harvest onions when the tops turn yellow, dry in the sun, and store in low boxes in a cool place. Perennials started in June and July should be transplanted to permanent quarters at this time to give them time to gain a firm start before freezing weather.

Wednesday, Aug. 26

Remove all seed formations from plants, unless the seed is wanted for propagation purposes, because much strength is required to produce it. Prepare the soil for peonies sometime before planting to allow it to settle. Make the holes deeper than the plants are to go in and use rich soil for peonies are gross feeders.

Sow a cover crop, such as millett, hairy vetch, or crimson clover. Plow vacant lots for sowing with alfalfa to keep down weeds and for its feeding value. Cut dahlia blooms in late afternoon, strip off the lower leaves, and plunge the stems in hot water leaving them in it until the water cools.

Thursday, Aug. 27

Cut out all suckers on grafted shrubs and roses. Gardeners should visit other gardens and note plants and methods that may be used and if a permanent record of garden operations is kept it will be of great reference value in future years. Try potting a lily for Christmas flowering.

An application of fertilizer around each peony plant will strengthen it for next season's bloom. The coldframe is a fine place in which to grow a fast crop of lettuce and radishes. Remove old canes from raspberries. Dig a few plants of parsley and pot them; they will supply garnishing material all winter.

Friday, Aug. 28

From now on amaryllis bulbs should be allowed to rest or become dormant. They will start into activity again during winter when they may be watered. Like all plants they require a resting period. Cut back goldenglow severely and it will flower again.

Fall plowing of land intended for vegetable growing next season should be under way. Old sod soil or weed patches that can be utilized as a garden respond very well to fall plowing, but when plowed in spring much labor is necessary to get it into condition for planting.

Saturday, Aug. 29

The calla lily is a fine plant for home use in the winow and it should be potted now. The size of the roots [rhizomes] vary from the small to those 8 inches or more in length and pots of suitable size should be used. The plants require abundant food and copious amounts of water when well established. Even when out of flower the plants are attractive.

Watch for mildew and other fungus disease. The standard spray is Bordeaux mixture and sulphur dust for rust and mildew. Remove deadwood from shrubs and trees. It is easy to distinguish while the leaves are on the plants.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

There are long weeks ahead when exterior painting of a house is possible. For centuries home owners have known that paint improves the appearance of a house and protects it from attacks of fungus growth and decay, but now we also are aware that paint gives a wood house an added degree of fire protection. And the same holds true for a wood shingle roof.

We are told by paint experts who have made practical tests that a single coat of paint to the wooden walls of a house will raise its flame resistance to a definite degree. Of course some woods ignite more easily than others, but all woods are given more fire protection by paint, and while some paints put up a stiffer resistance to fire than others, all paints possess a certain ability to defy flame.

Aids Defense Plans.

Any type of fire resistance we can give to our houses now to make them safer for the duration is a gift to national defense. While we are inspecting our houses to keep them in repair for the year ahead, it would be well to check on ways to make them safer from fires.

We should examine first of all the danger spots where fires start and see if we cannot put them in better shape. These spots can be found from cellar to attic, all thru the house.

The need is imperative now to clear out all junk from the attic; all rubbish catchall piles with their rags, papers, magazines, and clothing. They are a potential menace. Spontaneous combustion has caused more fires than most people know, and even the ink in old newspapers can start a devastating fire. Moreover, if furniture must be stored in an attic it should not be jammed close to the roof, but spaced out. Remove basement junk.

Some Safety Resolutions.

Fire-retard the basement ceiling.

Make sure your heating plant isn't going to start work this fall in an ailing state. Defective heating plants are one of the biggest single causes of fires.

Have your electric wiring checked by a licensed electrician if your house is old and its wiring is not according to present standards.

Place fire-stops of incombustible material between studs in the walls at floor levels if your house is constructed with hollow spaces in the walls which run from attic to cellar.

Protect or move pipes that are too near wood. Smoke pipes should be at least 18 inches from any wood. [You may have been getting by with closer spacing for quite some time but wood, subjected to heat, gets too dry for safety after a period of months or years.]

Paint your roof if it is an old wooden shingle one and thus give it a chance to put up a fight against sparks from your own chimney of your neighbor's.

Queen of De Paul Married

Miss Ellen Paprocki, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Paprocki, 1319 West Chicago avenue, was recently married to James Skrodzki, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ted Skrodzki, 132 North Leamington avenue. They are both graduates of De Paul university. Mrs. Skrodzki was selected "Queen of De Paul" during her senior year in 1941-'42 and Mr. Skrodzki was a member of the basketball team.

BARRINGTON OUT FOR MORE NOISE IN TOWN SIREN

Five Night Festival Has $1,500 Goal.

All Barrington will make merry from Tuesday night thru Saturday to raise money for an air raid siren that can be heard for two miles. A street festival planned by the Barrington Lions club and the American Legion will be held on North Cook street between Railroad and Franklin avenues to raise $1,500 for a seven and a half horse power siren.

There will be merry-go-round and Ferris wheels for the children. Game booths will be sandwiched between war bond and stamp booths. An effort is being made to set a high mark in the Barrington sales of bonds during the five nights. The climax to the fund raising and bond buying event will be a program Saturday night with radio and screen stars invited to participate by the treasury department. On Tuesday and Wednesday evenings there will be concerts by the Barrington Municipal band directed by Walter N. Sears.

Barrington has a small siren at the village hall which during the Aug. 12 black-out could be heard only three-quarters of a mile.

REVIEW CIVILIAN DEFENSE SETUP AT RALLY TODAY

The civilian defense program of Belmont-Cragin community will be reviewed at a massmeeting at 2 o'clock this afternoon in Hanson Park stadium, Central Park and Fullerton avenues. The community's civilian defense workers expect several thousand to attend the three hour demonstration and program.

Five hundred fifty block captains will be at the gathering, one of the largest yet to be staged on the northwest side. More than 100 certificates will be presented by Roy Levinson, 5th district director, to civilians who have finished training in first aid, gas, fire, and survey courses. Training officers for the four basic courses have been Harold E. Thomsen and Jack Landes.

Mayor Kelly, Uunited States coördinator, will give a brief address of welcome to be followed by posting of the colors by Boy Scouts and Legionnaires. The entertainment feature will include a skating act, three radio singers and a trapeze performance. Clowns will be stationed at various points among the spectators. John W. Robinson, commander is being assisted with the program by Joseph Fox, chairman, and Mrs. Laura Thornly and Ralph O. Munson, program committee.

"Guess My Age!"

New Kind of Face Powder Makes Her Look Years Younger!

ONCE THIS lovely girl looked quite a bit older. Some people actually thought she was approaching middle age...

For she was the innocent victim of an unflattering shade of face powder! It was a cruel shade—treacherous and sly. Like a harsh light, it showed up every tiny line in her face—accented every little skin fault—even seemed to exaggerate the size of the pores.

But look at her now! Can you guess her age? Is she 21—30—35?

She has found her lucky shade of face powder! She has found the shade that really flatters her skin—makes her look young and enchanting.

How old does your face powder say you are?

Are you quite sure the shade of face powder you use is exactly right for you? Are you sure it doesn't lie about your age—that it doesn't say you're getting a bit older?

Why take that chance? Why not find your lucky shade—the shade that makes you look your youngest and loveliest?

You can—without guesswork and without cost! Send for the 7 new shades of Lady Esther Face Powder. Try them one after another—let your mirror tell you which is the perfect shade for you!

Lady Esther Face Powder is made an entirely new way. It's blown by TWIN HURRICANES until it's softer and smoother by far than any ordinary face powder. That's why it clings so long—clings 4 hours or more! And that's why its shades and its texture are so unusually flattering.

Try all 7 Shades FREE

Find your most flattering shade of Lady Esther Face Powder! Send for the 7 new shades and try them all. You'll know your lucky shade—it makes your skin look younger, lovelier! Mail this coupon now!

Hain, who starred for five seasons with the New York Opera Comique, will offer three solo selections and sing a duet with Miss Claire. Michael Wilkomirsky, concert master of the orchestra, will play a violin solo of Tschaikowsky's "Melodie." The chorus will sing Lehar's "Carnival" and also will be heard with the soloists.

Two of the selections, "Sylvia" and "I'll See You Again," are drawn from $25 prize winning letters written by members of the radio audience. The story behind the winners' favorite songs will be dramatized on the program.

Kenneth MacGregor, W-G-N chief of production, will be the producer and Marvin Mueller will be the announcer.

ELSON, SAVAGE IN BROADCAST OF ALL-STAR GAME

Event Friday Is Ninth Straight for Bob.

Bob Elson and Guy Savage, W-G-N veteran sports announcers, have been selected to air W-G-N and the Mutual network's exclusive broadcast of the ninth annual Chicago Bears-College All-Stars football game direct from Soldiers' field from 9 to 11:30 p. m. next Friday.

Elson, who will be broadcasting his ninth straight All-Star game, will give the play-by-play account while Savage will supply the color and background material.

The game is sponsored by Chicago Tribune Charities, Inc., with the proceeds going to the Army Emergency and Navy Relief funds. According to advance estimates, the service charities will receive approximately $160,000 as more than 100,000 persons will witness the game. This crowd will assure the All-Star event first place in sports donations for any single game.

The Bears are champions of the National Professional Football league while the All-Stars were selected in newspaper and radio polls all over the country from the ranks of last season's outstanding seniors.

Bob Zuppke, former head coach at the University of Illinois, will direct the All-Stars' squad of 62 men. His assistants will be Oregon State's Lon Steiner, Texas Aggies' Homer Norton, Northwestern's Burt Ingwersen, and Notre Dame's Frank Leahy. TEACHING POSTS FILLED THO WAR JOBS LURE MANY

Puffer Replaces 500 in County Schools.

Altho teachers are deserting their profession this year in favor of better wages and easier working conditions in war industries, the office of Noble J. Puffer, county superintendent of schools, is nearly done with the job of listing 6,000 instructors for the new year. Only 50 remained to be hired last week.

Stricter standards for teachers become effective Sept. 1, but the year's staff is expected to be complete before that date, so the higher standards need not apply this year, according to a spokesman in Puffer's office. Some of this year's staff will not have college degrees as required by the new rules, but may have only three years of normal school work. This eased the hiring job. Lowering standards to pre-1938 requirements of only two year normal school degrees has not been necessary.

Hire 500 New Teachers.

The inroads of war thru the draft, enlistments and industry competition are indicated by the fact that 500 new teachers had to be hired this year compared with only 381 last year.

It was emphasized, however, that no shortage of qualified candidates exists. Despite the war, the ratio of women to men teachers will remain at about 20 to 1, as last year.

Most of the remaining shortages are in rural primary schools where transportation is a major problem. Prospective teachers hesitate to use tires in school work when they can save them and get more money in other jobs, it was reported. And where rural teachers used to stay in nearby farmhouses, these rooms are no longer available.

Plan to Aid Bond Sales.

With the teacher problem nearly solved for the general opening on the day after Labor day, Puffer is looking to other problems to be brought on by war in the school year. Already plans have been made for coöperation in sale of war saving stamps, war bonds, and other patriotic activities.

To meet the war emergencies, Puffer has named an advisory committee to decide questions of school war activities.

CATHOLIC SCHOOL PLANS

New courses designed to keep students in touch with the war will be introduced in Catholic elementary and high schools Tuesday, Sept. 8, when 170,000 students return to classes. Msgr. Daniel Cunningham, superintendent of Catholic schools in the Chicago archdiocese, said that the pupils of the elementary upper grades will be given courses stressing the history of the South American countries and the Pacific islands. New text books covering these subjects will be introduced.

Classes in home economics and home nursing will be inaugurated or expanded in Catholic girls' school here. Emphasis in the boys' high schools will be placed on mathematics, mechanical drawing, and scientific subjects.

Classes will operate on the same schedule as heretofore, altho arrangements have been made to stagger the hours should it prove necessary.

Dickson Joins Marines.

John Paul Dickson, former W-G-N and Mutual correspondent in Berlin, who returned to this country recently on the S. S. Drottningholm, has joined the United States marine corps.

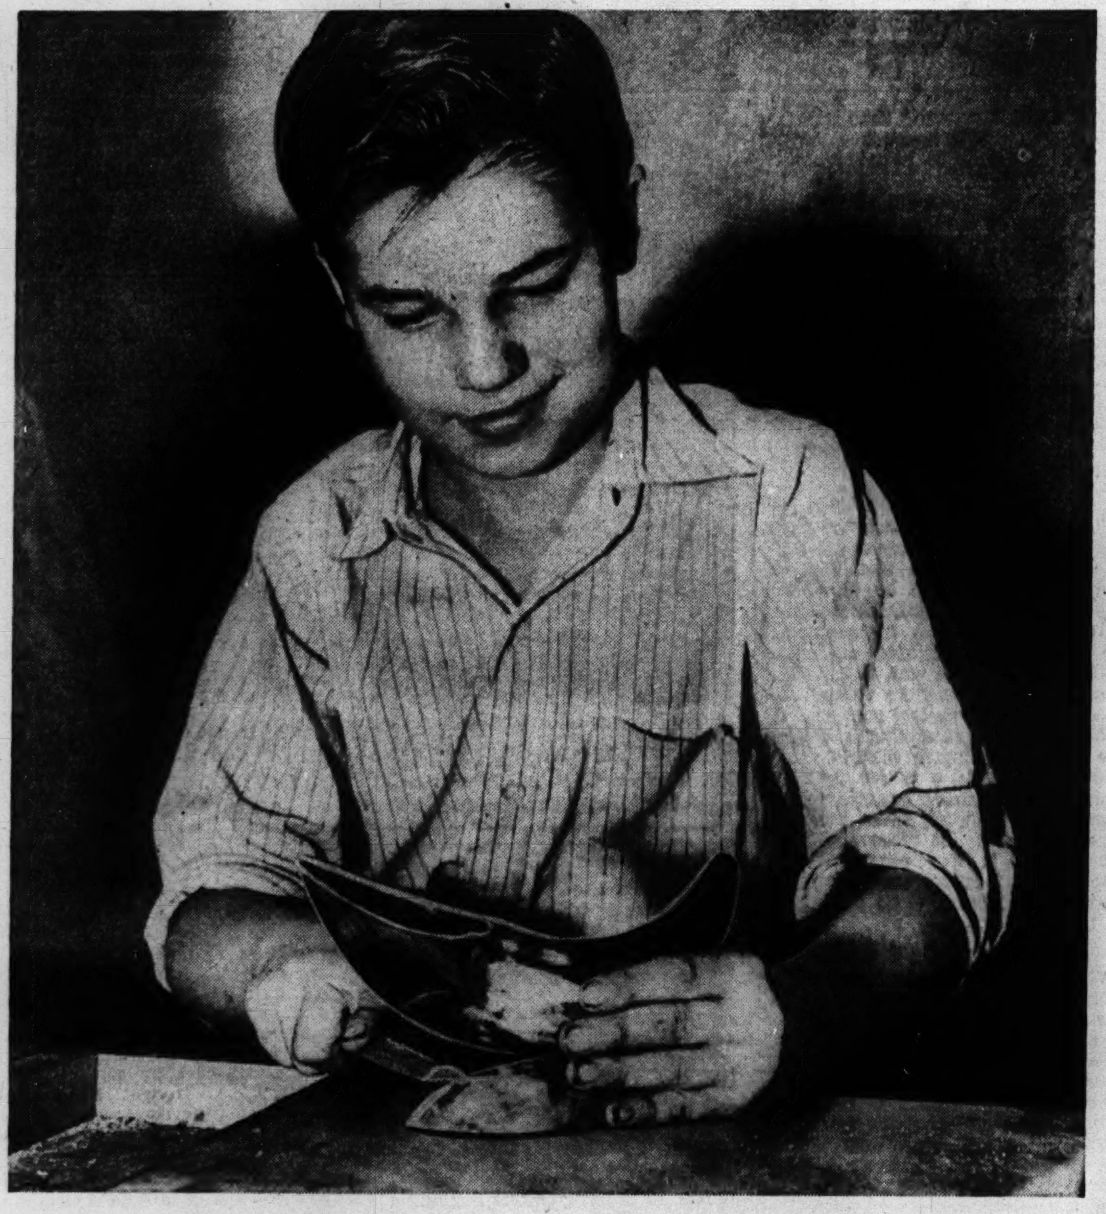
SOUTHWEST SIDE BACKS ARMY SHOW

Stockyards Club Uses Cattle Horns for Handicraft Work



The cattle that provide the meat for the table also contribute a decorative touch to the homes of Stockyards workers. Richard Root Jr., the son of a packing house worker, is one of a group of boys who spend their leisure time converting horns into ash trays, boats, and other items. He's scraping the base for an ash tray that will soon be prominently displayed in his home. Many of the Stockyards' homes boast examples of horncraft.

Joe Carroll, the son of a packing house worker, thrusts a large horn into the shovelful that August Ghilarducci is putting into Frank Messina's sack. They're taking them from Swift's bonehouse in the Stockyards. Swift's provide the boys with this raw material.

Some of the horns have a better shape and texture than the others, and the boys are out to find the ones that will produce the best articles. The large ones are fine for boats; the smaller may be developed into attractive ash trays. Selections are being conducted here by Bob Huels, Richard Root Jr., Frank Messina, Christ Ghilarducci, and Joe Carroll.

Here's a display of the articles that have been made from cattle horns. August Ghilarducci, Frank Messina, and Joe Carroll made some of them in the Valentine Boys' club, 3400 Emerald avenue.

STEEL WORKERS POOL CARS; SAVE TIME AND TIRES

Charles Curry works in the machine shop at the Archer avenue plant of Acme Steel company. He resides in Downers Grove. He was working the night shift steadily when his automobile developed a chronic tire condition. He began traveling to work by train, bus and street car, a process which consumed four hours daily.

One day while conversing with his foreman, R. E. Anderson, Curry mentioned his mode of travel. Anderson looked around and found that Laverne Drendel of Lisle drove to work daily, but on the day shift. He found it would be simple for Curry and Drendel to make connections. He arranged Curry's transfer to the day shift. His transportation time has been cut in half.

75 Workers Drive.

Curry isn't Drendel's only passenger. He also drives Frank Pecinka and Russell Mork. Pecinka lives in Berwyn; Mork in Riverside. Many of Acme's employés already are pooling their cars, and more of them are eager to do so. In coöperation with the war transportation board, a survey last week showed that 50 per cent of the plant's more than 600 employés own automobiles. Of this number, 24 per cent or 75 drive to work. Half of these share their automobiles. The others expressed a desire to do the same. The company is working now on a plan to achieve this.

It would be a long ride by bus, train and street car to the Archer works from Harvey so Eugene Hayes, 15704 Lexington avenue; Gaylord Connant, 15716 Lexington avenue, and William Bondurant, 164th street and Turner avenue, have trebled the life of their automobiles. Each drives his car every third day, picks the others up.

Three Pool Riding.

Harry Roos, 7136 Parnell avenue; Joseph Fortino, 7834 Ingleside avenue, and Walter Bickle, 7051 Parnell avenue, use their own cars every third week. The rest of the time they ride in each others. They've found that besides being patriotic and conserving rubber, they're also saving money.

Edward Kleckner, 4831 North Washtenaw avenue, is a new employé in the plan department. He has a car, shares it with Ray McSchill, 3920 North Ashland avenue; Bernice Lohff, 4212 Sawyer avenue, and Evelyn Olsen, 4025 North Albany avenue. He saves his passengers an hour a day. Normally, they'd take three street cars. Kleckner's fellow employés subject him to much good natured ribbing. They tell him they'd be tickled to share their cars, too, if they could get such good looking passengers as Bernice and Evelyn.

Glen Korth, 4441 Altgeld avenue, drives three to work with him daily. They are Charles Berndt, 2325 North Harding avenue; Lewis Tynus, 2505 North Spaulding avenue; Julius Masco, 1411 Adams street, and Joseph Canna 7717 Dobson avenue.

Helps Train Riders.

Workers in the corrugated fastener department have worked out a plan whereby they drive every third week. The participants are Richard McCallum, 1214 East 73d street; Joseph O'Neill, 7746 Greenwood avenue; Dan Knight, 7324 University avenue.

Kenneth Coe, 2024 Sunnyside avenue, a machine shop worker, sees to it that four of his co-workers make connections with their trains and buses. He drives Clarence Neslund, 808 Wilson avenue; Harry Nelson, Evanston; William Cook, Harvey, and Herbert Garity, Hazelcrest, to their depots.

Anton Petrasek, Berwyn; Jerry Reis, Oak Park, and William Taylor, Maywood, all drive daily to a central point, Jerry's home, where they then take turns driving their respective cars to the Archer avenue plant. Jerry worked out an eight week schedule, where he and Bill drive three weeks each, and Tony drives two.

Each group works out the financial end of the deal himself. Some of the men who drive their cars pass up any remuneration. Others collect a dime from each one for the gas and upkeep. Others keep the driver in cigarets. It's been working fine, the employés said.

Service Roll Dedicated by Southwest Precinct

The 48th precinct of the 14th ward dedicated a service plaque last week honoring its men who have gone to war. The ceremonies were held at 4751 Princeton avenue. On the committee were John Owen, Gus Maier, Michael J. Boyle, Mrs. Florence Kuehnel, William Lipke, Andrew McGivney, Rep. John F. Boyle, and Victor Henry.

Catholic Woman's Club Is Hostess for Service Men

Mrs. Bart McDonough, 7951 South Wood street, was chairman of the party sponsored for service men yesterday at 1122 South Wabash avenue. It was given by the South Side Catholic Woman's club, of which she is a vice president.

Kipley Family Busy Fighting Fires Since '55

Ever since Lawrence Franz Kipley became a volunteer fireman in Chicago in 1855, some member of his family has been on a fire department, including four great-grandsons who now are serving in Dolton and Riverdale.

That probably is a record, but individual members have garnered other records also. The late Peter Kipley, son of Lawrence Franz, set a record of eight seconds in the "quick bunk room hitch" event in an international competition in Chicago on Aug. 28, 1878, 64 years ago, and earned the sobriquet, "The Nation's No. 1 Fireman."

A son of Peter, Edward A. Kipley, present chief fire marshal of Riverdale, set a national record of 4 4-5 seconds in a hose coupling contest in Kewanee, Ill., in 1907. He also was champion in two succeeding contests and won a permanent trophy.

Daughter Likes Fires.

Members of the fourth generation hold no big recods yet, but Rita, a daughter of Peter F. Kipley, 9047 Muskegon avenue, shows signs of the old fire sense that has kept the family active on the fire fronts so long. She is "hot" on fires, her father said.

Of the 250 men who competed in the first tournament of the National Firemen's association in 1878, not one is believed still living, Peter F. Kipley said. One man, who recalls just how Peter Sr. won the quick bunk room hitch title, is John Clancey, 8028 South May street. Clancey was a boy at the time and jumped a fence to see the event, which thrilled him so much that he later became a fireman himself and is now a member of a retired firemen's association.

Clancey reports that visiting contestants, who came from as far as Mexico, objected but were overruled when Peter Kipley vaulted over his team of horses to save time in hitching. None of the others came close to his eight second record.

Practice for Commuters.

"It would be good practice," Kipley said, "for commuters who have trouble with their morning schedules."

The elder Peter also was quite a man on a dance floor, according to older women in the neighborhood of 24th and Canal streets, near where old engine company No. 28, with which Peter served, was quartered. But otherwise he was not noted particularly as an athlete. Twenty-fourth street was MacGregor street then.

Soon after, both their families moved to Chicago and they were married about a year later. They have two sons, two daughters, and six grandchildren. Two of the latter are in military service.

Cattle Horns Furnish Boys Objets d'Art

In the extensive process of converting steers into beef and innumerable byproducts at the Union stockyards, the inevitable remainder is a vast pile of horns in the bonehouse.

That's where the Valentine Boys' club, 3400 Emerald avenue, comes in. Twice a year, a boys' club representative visits the bonehouse, selects a pile of horns. These are taken to the boys' club, where members of the horncraft class—mostly boys whose fathers work in the packing houses—convert them into ash trays, boats, birds, and other items for their homes.

The bulk of the horns is provided by lightweight steers, as the larger cattle are shipped without horns to prevent goring in transit. In the old days, steers used to arrive in the yards with horns with a four foot spread.

Soak in Lye Water.

At the boys' club, the first step in the conversion of the horns is cleaning and this is done by soaking the horns in lye water. After a drying of several days on the club's roof, the horns are placed in a bin in the workshop. When the boys have selected their project, they rummage in the bin until they find a horn that suits their purpose. The boys regard black horns as prizes, because they polish easily.

Horncraft is an inexpensive hobby. It requires a hacksaw, file, knife, steel wool, emery paper, a polishing compound, and an abundance of patience. The most popular example, perhaps because it is the simplest, is an ash tray.

200 Engaged in Hobby.

At the Valentine Boys' club now, there are 200 boys engaged in horncraft. Special classes are conducted by Malcom Shanower. Some of the boys reported that when they brought home the results of their work, their fathers garnered horns from the stockyards and fashioned replicas of their sons' craft.

Horncraft is an old art. In colonial times it was used extensively. The cap and powder horn was a must in the days of the muzzle loading musket. The craft has been practiced extensively in the stockyards district for the last 12 years. Stewart McKnarr, then associated with the University of Chicago Settlement back of the yards, vacationed in the west, saw some examples there, and wondered if it could be done here. He returned and inaugurated classes.

Keeps Its Popularity.

During his stay at the settlement, more than 4,000 horns were converted. He thought it would be successful because it was expressive of the community, but he didn't figure it would have sustaining popularity. When he came to the boys' club several months ago, he accelerated the horncraft program.

Particularly active in it are Bob Huels, 3636 Wallace street; Frank Messina, 3134 Princeton avenue; Christ and August Ghilarducci, 3134 Princeton avenue; Joe Carroll, 3633 Emerald avenue; Frank Sapinskas, 3428 Lituanica avenue; Richard Root Jr., 3635 Emerald avenue.

26,000 IN AREA TO SEE NATION'S POWER PARADE

2,000 Taking Roles in War Drama.

The 20 southwest communities which comprise civilian defense division 3 have undertaken to fill 26,000 seats at the army's war show in Soldiers' field Sunday evening, Sept. 6. Frank C. Rathje, division chief, said that Mayor Kelly has designated that night as division 3 night, and the division's civilian defense unit has committed itself to dispose of 26,000 tickets.

The war show will open Wednesday, Sept. 2, and continue thru Wednesday, Sept. 12. Its director is Maj. Charles Spencer Hart, who directed the same type of show for the army in World War I. The army emergency relief fund will benefit.

Aids Those in Need.

This fund is designed, Hart said, to fill the gap between the operations of government bureaus. It functions like this: John Jones is missing in action. He may or may not be dead. His insurance is not payable because there is no proof of his death. His salary is withheld because he is unable to sign his check. Meantime his wife and dependents are in need. That is where the army emergency relief fund goes to work.

The show will last 100 minutes. It was originated last January when the war department decided that the citizens should be given an opportunity to see how their army trains and operates. A task force of 2,000 soldiers was trained. The army in action in jeeps, tanks, airplanes, with artillery and motorcycles, the signal corps, engineers, and anti-aircraft, will be shown.

How the army lives, works, and fights will be demonstrated. Cavalry troops will show their function. Flame throwers and tanks will be displayed. The climax of the show is a sham battle, using all units, in which American troops encounter and overwhelm a Japanese force. Maj. Hart said that the soldiers draw lots to see who must play the rôle of the enemy.

Each to Get Badge.

The south end of Soldiers' field has been reserved for residents of division 3. Each purchaser will receive an insignia to be worn on his lapel the night of Sept. 6. It recites that he is a resident of division 3. Tickets were placed on sale in 75 stores and offices Thursday. They will go off sale on Monday, Aug. 31.

Rathje said that the committees expect no trouble in disposing of the tickets, as division 3 has a population of nearly 1,000,000. He has asked all residents of the division to arrive at the field at 7:30 o'clock, when a program will be presented by the residents of the community until the show starts at 8:30 o'clock. Carl Sommer, music director of the Englewood Kiwanis club, will lead community singing. The Sons of the Legion of Englewood post are billed to play.

Frank Burke is the assistant division chief. George Cleveland, Southtown editor, has been named coördinator of the committee. Others serving on it are Susan Mach, co-chairman; Frank Covert, ticket sales; Stanley Van Dyke, who heads the ticket distribution to sale stations. John Meuris is associated with him on this committee. Paul Lynd, Paul Rupprecht, and Robert Murray are other committee members.

Leaders in Area.

Key committee posts are being filled, too, by the commanders of the communities within the division. They are Raymond Welsh, 2942 South Emerald avenue, Bridgeport; Dr. Joseph Laibe, 3401 South Western avenue, McKinley Park; John Owen, 4335 South Princeton avenue, Fuller Park; Charles Peterson, Stockyards; John V. Finn, 4829 South Ashland avenue, Town of Lake; Dr. Gustav Gosicki, 4231 Archer avenue, Brighton Park; Frank Cygan, 4804 South Hamlin avenue, Archer Heights; Thomas Cody, 5542 South Natoma avenue, Garfield Ridge; Alfred Seltin, 5540 West 65th street, Clearing.

GUIDE BOOK PLAN TO TOUR CITY IN 7 DAYS IS TOUGH

Reporter Gets Sore Feet the First Day.

War conditions have caused the Chicago Recreation commission to remind Chicagoans of the vacation advantages of their city. They have issued a booklet which in other times would have been intended solely for the visitor. A reporter, new to Chicago, has taken the first tour.

BY JOSEPH GREEN.

You'll have an interesting day seeing Chicago the recreation commission way. But you may have to skip the suggested route for the second day until you can recover from the first, unless you are a superman.

Probably you'll feel much better after you've had a hot bath and soaked your feet in hot water for a while and you are likely to go to bed early, even if you have decided you'll just take it easy the next day.

But for the benefit of others who plan to trust a booklet, "Vacationing in Chicago" and follow the suggested program, "Spending Seven Days in Chicago," they should spend some time hardening themselves for the job.

Morning: Take the I. C. or the elevated out to Jackson park and visit the Museum of Science and Industry.

Lunch at the museum or at International house or at the coffee shop on the University of Chicago campus.

Afternoon Program.

Afternoon: Visit the University of Chicago chapel, the Oriental institute, and other campus buildings or nearby churches of interest. Take a No. 1 bus [South Park way, west end of Washington park] north to the loop, transfer to a No. 51 and ride to Devon avenue and Broadway. Nearby are Loyola university and Mundelein college.

Dinner on the far north side.

Evening: Many motion picture theaters, dancing or swimming in this area. Back to the loop by street car, elevated or bus.

After you have trod the marble floors of the Museum of Science and Industry for a couple of hours [and you could spend a day and not see it all] you may feel you have spent enough time improving your mind for one day. You've seen some of Jackson park, with its winding, smooth driveways and the beach and lake beyond.

Many Races Represented.

At last you find International house. Dinner is served on a stone terrace looking into a quiet court where a fountain splashes. You see that International house really has a meaning. One of the waitresses appears to be Chinese. A woman who comes in with a curly haired Irishman might be Indian, Egyptian or Syrian, but has a pleasant manner and speaks beautiful English. There are others of various races.

You drag yourself away from the pleasant surroundings and again continue your tour of the campus, including the university chapel, the Oriental institute and other buildings, if you have time.

You walk into the chapel and startle a colored soldier and his girl sitting near the door on the back pew. Down front a blonde girl and her instructor are struggling with sharps and flats in a lesson on a big, gold harp.

It's quiet and peaceful. The church is beautiful. You go on, however, to the next stop, and even with a map of the campus you get lost en route to the Oriental institute, only two blocks away.

You must hurry. You walk around, glance at a couple of mummies and a huge statue of King Tutankhamen of Egypt, and view a huge stone statuary bull's head recovered from Persian ruins. Then you buy a pamphlet guide of the museum for 10 cents and decide you'll come back later.

Washington park, next stop, is right over there, some one tells you. Two blocks to the east end, or perhaps three. You are supposed to walk to the west end. You do and learn that this is the Negro section of the city. You see thousands of colored citizens enjoying the park. Several hundred crowd a big swimming pool.

Then you get to the west end and the first bus that comes along is No. 1. You crawl feebly aboard and drop into the nearest seat. The worst is over. Now you can ride a long way.

You expected to see something of the north side beaches, but it's too late. When the bus gets going along Michigan avenue and the Outer drive you're jammed against a wall and the aisles are full of people.

You see some of Lincoln park, but a fellow with a dirty shirt blocks the view the other way. He's one of the crowd hurrying home from work. You arrive at Devon avenue and Broadway and see towering Mundelein college and the Loyola campus beyond. You're willing to call it a day. Somehow you're willing now to forego the motion picture theaters, dancing and swimming. You hop the first bus back to the loop, heading for the rest and comfort of your home.

You know that Chicago is a big, busy city. You're aware that there are many places of interest, many facilities for recreation. You know you want to see and do dozens of things suggested in "Vacationing in Chicago."

But you'll resolve, also, to take your time about it.

Prizes will be awarded in each section of the city. A grand award will also be given. Charles M. Hayes, president of the motor club, said that the play yard contest was started three years ago to encourage the development of play sites in back yards, after surveys showed that the child death rate from automobile accidents mounted in the summer.

TEACHING POSTS FILLED THO WAR JOBS LURE MANY

Puffer Replaces 500 in County Schools.

Altho teachers are deserting their profession this year in favor of better wages and easier working conditions in war industries, the office of Noble J. Puffer, county superintendent of schools, is nearly done with the job of listing 6,000 instructors for the new year. Only 50 remained to be hired last week.

Stricter standards for teachers become effective Sept. 1, but the year's staff is expected to be complete before that date, so the higher standards need not apply this year, according to a spokesman in Puffer's office. Some of this year's staff will not have college degrees as required by the new rules, but may have only three years of normal school work. This eased the hiring job. Lowering standards to pre-1938 requirements of only two year normal school degrees has not been necessary.

Hire 500 New Teachers.

The inroads of war thru the draft, enlistments and industry competition are indicated by the fact that 500 new teachers had to be hired this year compared with only 381 last year.

It was emphasized, however, that no shortage of qualified candidates exists. Despite the war, the ratio of women to men teachers will remain at about 20 to 1, as last year.

Most of the remaining shortages are in rural primary schools where transportation is a major problem. Prospective teachers hesitate to use tires in school work when they can save them and get more money in other jobs, it was reported. And where rural teachers used to stay in nearby farmhouses, these rooms are no longer available.

Plan to Aid Bond Sales.

With the teacher problem nearly solved for the general opening on the day after Labor day, Puffer is looking to other problems to be brought on by war in the school year. Already plans have been made for coöperation in sale of war saving stamps, war bonds, and other patriotic activities.

To meet the war emergencies, Puffer has named an advisory committee to decide questions of school war activities.

SAYS BLACK-OUT 97% PERFECT IN SOUTHWEST AREA

Frank J. Burke, assistant chief of civilian defense division 3, said that the black-out of Aug. 12 in the 20 communities which comprise the division, was 97 per cent perfect. Complaints concerned the sirens, which many residents said they wouldn't have heard unless they were expecting them, and the pilot lights on the gas street lights far southwest. These remained lighted in many spots.

60 Years Together

Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph C. Lange, 8336 South Green street, are looking forward to Thursday, when they will mark their 60th wedding anniversary.

FAMILY TO FETE COUPLE ON 60TH WEDDING DATE

Langes Are Pioneers of Englewood.

Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph C. Lange, 8336 South Green street, will be married 60 years Thursday. They'll celebrate the occasion in their home with their children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren.

The couple were married in the old Trinity Lutheran church, then located at 25th and Canal streets. The ceremony was read by the late Rev. Ludwig Lochner.

Settle in Englewood.

They've made their home in Englewood since the early days of their marriage. Their first home was in the heart of the community, on Halsted street near 63d. At that time house numbers didn't go that far south, and the Langes' home was known to their friends as "the last house on Halsted street, before Washington Heights."

Both were born in Germany. Mrs. Lange, now 78, came to Chicago in 1872 as 9 year old Bertha Tabbert. Mr. Lange took up residence here eight years later. They met at a wedding of friends, and two years later were married.

Founders of Church.

Until the turn of the century, Mr. Lange was a carpenter. Then he began specializing in the construction of bowling alleys, a business which took him thru the United States and Canada.

Mr. and Mrs. Lange were among the founders of the St. Stephen's Lutheran church on the north side, when it was organized in 1889. Today they are the only surviving charter members of the congregation.

Seven children were born to the couple, five of whom are still living. These are Mrs. Fred Lange, 7923 South Elizabeth street; Waldemar Lange, 8343 Rhodes avenue; Mrs. Bertha Scheidel, Tulsa, Okla.; the Rev. Robert Lange, 2252 North Karlov avenue, and Elmer Lange, 2021 North Nordica avenue. They also have 11 grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

CHINESE SCHOOL ADDS TEACHERS FOR FALL TERM

Expects 100 Students in Parochial Classes.

Two teachers have been added to the staff of St. Therese school, the only Chinese parochial school in the middle west, it was announced by the Rev. John Mao, pastor of the Chinese Catholic mission. The school will open Sept. 8. Registration is scheduled for Sept. 1-3.

The school will observe its first anniversary Sept. 25. The school was founded by Father Mao and its four first graduates plan to enter high school this fall. The school offers instruction in the eight elementary grades.

Expect 100 Students.

Father Mao said it was possible that the enrollment of the school this year would be limited to 100 students. Last year there were approximately 75. Classes are held at the Chinese CYO center and the Chinese city hall.

The first year the staff was made up of two sisters from the Notre Dame parish and two lay teachers. This year two more teachers from the Notre Dame parish are to be added to the staff. Sisters from Notre Dame were also instructors in the first summer school of the Chinese parish which recently closed.

They're Avid Pupils.

The Chinese students at the summer school differed little from other students who attended schools thruout the city, Father Mao said. The possible difference was their enthusiasm. While the school was ended at noon, Father Mao reported many would return in the afternoon for another hour's work. In addition to regular instruction in elementary and high school subjects, special courses were offered in crafts, typing, music, and shorthand.

CATHOLIC SCHOOL PLANS

New courses designed to keep students in touch with the war will be introduced in Catholic elementary and high schools Tuesday, Sept. 8, when 170,000 students return to classes. Msgr. Daniel Cunningham, superintendent of Catholic schools in the Chicago archdiocese, said that the pupils of the elementary upper grades will be given courses stressing the history of the South American countries and the Pacific islands.

Classes in home economics and home nursing will be inaugurated or expanded in Catholic girls' school here. Emphasis in the boys' high schools will be placed on mathematics, mechanical drawing, and scientific subjects.

Keep Same Schedule.

Classes will operate on the same schedule as heretofore, altho arrangements have been made to stagger the hours should it prove necessary.

Holy Redeemer school in Evergreen Park is the only new parochial school to be opened this year. St. Augustine's grammar, 5045 Laflin street, and St. Malachy's, 2248 Washington boulevard, have added secondary courses. St. Barbara's, 2859 South Throop street, will abandon its commercial designation and become a regular four year high school. St. Ann's, 1814 South Leavitt street, will start the semester as a four year coeducational high school. St. Felicitas, 1526 East 84th street, will add a two year coeducational commercial course to its program.

Enrollment Decrease Seen.

A decrease of 1,500 in grammar school enrollments is anticipated this year. The approximate enrollment is expected to be 147,591, and high school enrollments are expected to reach 29,195.

Mount Carmel, Catholic south side boys' high school, will introduce a course in aeronautics, a pretraining of aviation cadets in accordance with the army air force's suggestion. The fundamentals of aerodynamics, meteorology, navigation, and civil air rules will be taught.

Women's Band to Give Jackson Park Concert

The Chicago Women's Concert band, directed by Lillian Poenisch, will give the concert at Jackson Park band shell at 8 o'clock this evening. Monna Van, soprano, and Margaret Beringer and Jeanette Reed, trumpet players, will be the soloists. The program will include the march, "National Emblem," and the waltz, "Danube Waves."

Hospital Auxiliary Secretary

Mrs. William L. Gregg, 330 Normal parkway, is serving the woman's auxiliary of Englewood hospital this year as recording secretary. She was ways and means chairman for two years.

'SERGEANT YORK' OF ILLINOIS TO BE HONORED TODAY

Foreign Speaking Units Plan Heroes' Pageant.

Illinois' "Sergt. York," Jake Allex Mandusich, 5926 May street, will be among army and navy heroes honored at Soldiers' field today in Illinois National day ceremonies. Sergt. Mandusich will be honored as part of a pageant given by 24 Illinois foreign language groups under sponsorship of the foreign language division of the Illinois State Council of Defense.

Awarded Medal of Honor.

Sergt. Mandusich, a member of the 131st infantry, 33d division, was awarded the congressional medal of honor for his heroism during the battle of Argonne in World War I. When all of the officers of his platoon were killed, Mandusich, then a corporal, assumed command and led it forward until the advance was halted by fire from an enemy machine gun nest.

Then he advanced alone for 30 yards in face of intense fire. He killed five of the enemy with his bayonet. When it was broken, he used the butt of his rifle to subdue 15 men, all of whom were taken prisoners. Mandusich is now a city employé.

Another southwest side resident to figure prominently in the program will be Mrs. Paul Manghera, 6111 South Marshfield avenue, who will depict the Statue of Liberty.

Pledge War Aid.

Three thousand persons will appear on Soldiers' field at one time, during the pageant. Andrew Fasseas, chairman of the division, said a demonstration will be given of the solidarity behind the war effort of Illinois foreign language groups.

The participating groups will be British, Belgian, Chinese, Czech, Danish, Dutch, Filipino, Finnish, French, German, Greek, Hungarian, Italian, Jugo-Slav, Lithuanian, Norwegian, Mexican, Polish, Russian, Slovak, Swedish, Syrian, Bulgarian, and Ukranian.

Hain, who starred for five seasons with the New York Opera Comique, will offer three solo selections and sing a duet with Miss Claire. His solos will be: Lehar's "Love Is a Pilgrim," Speak's "Sylvia," and the serenade from Romberg's "Student Prince." His duet selection with Miss Claire will be Coward's "I'll See You Again."

Miss Claire will also offer three solo selections: "Say Not Love Is a Dream," by Lehar; a special arrangement of "Ave Maria," and Herbert's "Love Is Best of All" from "Princess Pat."

Musical background will be supplied by the W-G-N Symphony orchestra under the baton of Henry Weber and by the chorus directed by Robert Trendler. The orchestra will be heard playing two selections: Weinberger's "Polka" from "Schwanda," and the "Gypsy Dance" from Bizet's "Carmen."

Michael Wilkomirsky, concert master of the orchestra, will play a violin solo of Tschaikowsky's "Melodie." The chorus will sing Lehar's "Carnival" and also will be heard with the soloists.

Two of the selections, "Sylvia" and "I'll See You Again," are drawn from $25 prize winning letters written by members of the radio audience. The story behind the winners' favorite songs will be dramatized on the program.

Kenneth MacGregor, W-G-N chief of production, will be the producer and Marvin Mueller will be the announcer.

Lovely Mary Shipp plays the part of Kathleen, one of Henry Aldrich's girl friends, in the Aldrich Family serial which is heard at 7:30 p. m. Thursday evenings over WMAQ and NBC.

FOUR FREEDOMS IS TODAY'S ROUND TABLE SUBJECT

What picture of the future world is implied by the war goal set forth by President Roosevelt—the Four Freedoms? Discussion centered around this question will occupy three speakers on the University of Chicago Round Table at 1:30 p. m. today over WMAQ-NBC.

Mortimer J. Adler, professor of the philosophy of law at the University of Chicago; Carl J. Friedrich, professor of government at Harvard university, and William W. Waymack, editor of the editorial section of the Des Moines Register and Tribune, will be the speakers.

The trio will analyze the meaning of the proposed Four Freedoms—freedom of speech and religion and freedom from want and fear—and the practicability of their world-wide adoption. Other questions to be discussed include whether democracy is an end in itself or a means to goals such as freedoms listed by the President, and whether there is a still greater end to which the Four Freedoms themselves are merely means.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

There are long weeks ahead when exterior painting of a house is possible. For centuries home owners have known that paint improves the appearance of a house and protects it from attacks of fungus growth and decay, but now we also are aware that paint gives a wood house an added degree of fire protection. And the same holds true for a wood shingle roof.

We are told by paint experts who have made practical tests that a single coat of paint to the wooden walls of a house will raise its flame resistance to a definite degree. Of course some woods ignite more easily than others, but all woods are given more fire protection by paint, and while some paints put up a stiffer resistance to fire than others, all paints possess a certain ability to defy flame.

Aids Defense Plans.

Any type of fire resistance we can give to our houses now to make them safer for the duration is a gift to national defense. While we are inspecting our houses to keep them in repair for the year ahead, it would be well to check on ways to make them safer from fires.

We should examine first of all the danger spots where fires start and see if we cannot put them in better shape. These spots can be found from cellar to attic, all thru the house.

The need is imperative now to clear out all junk from the attic; all rubbish catchall piles with their rags, papers, magazines, and clothing. They are a potential menace. Spontaneous combustion has caused more fires than most people know, and even the ink in old newspapers can start a devastating fire. Moreover, if furniture must be stored in an attic it should not be jammed close to the roof, but spaced out. Remove basement junk.

Some Safety Resolutions.

Fire-retard the basement ceiling.

Make sure your heating plant isn't going to start work this fall in an ailing state. Defective heating plants are one of the biggest single causes of fires.

Have your electric wiring checked by a licensed electrician if your house is old and its wiring is not according to present standards.

Place fire-stops of incombustible material between studs in the walls at floor levels if your house is constructed with hollow spaces in the walls which run from attic to cellar.

Protect or move pipes that are too near wood. Smoke pipes should be at least 18 inches from any wood. [You may have been getting by with closer spacing for quite some time but wood, subjected to heat, gets too dry for safety after a period of months or years.]

Roof Painting Suggested.

Paint your roof if it is an old wooden shingle one and thus give it a chance to put up a fight against sparks from your own chimney or your neighbor's.

Have your chimney cleaned and checked for leaks. This should be done at least once a year. Loose bricks or cracked mortar should be replaced. If you want to do your own chimney cleaning wrap a brick in a large cloth—wrap it loosely—and then lower into chimney.

Invest in at least one fire extinguisher.

Investigate the condition of your extension cords and plugs and replace when there is a sign that insulation is worn or connections are loose.

Make some resolutions for greater fire safety around the house . . . That you won't use inflammable fluids for dry cleaning. . . . That you won't smoke in bed. . . . Or leave matches where children can get them. . . . That you won't leave a fire in an open fireplace or hunt for a gas leak with a match as a light or hang clothes over extension cords. . . . That you will cool an iron before you store it away and refrain from draping an electric cord on a radiator, and keep your oily rags in metal containers.

It is the little things that can cause big griefs and much woe; little things we can guard against.

Gardener Inspects Prize Crop.

Merwyn Raetzman Jr., 9342 South Oakley avenue, adjudged the winner in the grade school boys and and girls war garden contest, sponsored by the Beverly YMCA, looks over his tomatoes. He will be presented a gold medal in September, at the opening of school. A student at Kellogg, he is 11 years old.

Monday, Aug. 24

Evergreen planting should be done in September as the plants require an earlier start than decidious shrubs. There is a wide variety from which to make a selection. For background use and screening the white pine, Norway spruce, and Colorado green spruce are excellent. For foundation planting, the pfitzer juniper, Japanese yew, either spreading or upright types, are very useful, altho the mugho pine, cannart juniper, and savin juniper are quite popular.

Care must be taken not to plant large growing kinds near the house. Selection and location should be carefully studied before ordering for these plants endure for a considerable time. Do not cut back these plants when planting. Japanese and Siberian iris can be divided and planted now.

Tuesday, Aug. 25

Pot strawberries can be planted. They will give a small crop next season. Give privet hedges the final trimming. Plant madonna lilies as soon as they can be obtained. No more than 2 inches deep. Crocuses are excellent in the rock garden and should be planted early.

Harvest onions when the tops turn yellow, dry in the sun, and store in low boxes in a cool place. Perennials started in June and July should be transplanted to permanent quarters at this time to give them time to gain a firm start before freezing weather.

Make cuttings of English ivy, heliotrope, and poinsettias for winter flowering. The latter is worth a trial, altho it will require a somewhat uniform temperature and abundant light. By digging plantain and other weeds in the lawn now, filling in the bare spots with soil and reseeding, repairs will be affected that will give a better lawn.

Wednesday, Aug. 26

Remove all seed formations from plants, unless the seed is wanted for propagation purposes, because much strength is required to produce it. Prepare the soil for peonies sometime before planting to allow it to settle. Make the holes deeper than the plants are to go in and use rich soil for peonies are gross feeders.

Sow a cover crop, such as millett, hairy vetch, or crimson clover. Plow vacant lots for sowing with alfalfa to keep down weeds and for its feeding value. Cut dahlia blooms in late afternoon, strip off the lower leaves, and plunge the stems in hot water leaving them in it until the water cools.

Thursday, Aug. 27

Cut out all suckers on grafted shrubs and roses. Gardeners should visit other gardens and note plants and methods that may be used and if a permanent record of garden operations is kept it will be of great reference value in future years. Try potting a lily for Christmas flowering.

An application of fertilizer around each peony plant will strengthen it for next season's bloom. The coldframe is a fine place in which to grow a fast crop of lettuce and radishes. Remove old canes from raspberries. Dig a few plants of parsley and pot them; they will supply garnishing material all winter.

Cuttings of strong stems of house plants or those usually grown indoors should be made now. They can be rooted in a protected area outdoors or in pans or flats. If plants are to be lifted and potted, water around the plants until the ground is filled with moisture; they will be filled with moisture and considerable soil will remain in place, enabling the plants to revive quickly and become established.

Friday, Aug. 28

From now on amaryllis bulbs should be allowed to rest or become dormant. They will start into activity again during winter when they may be watered. Like all plants they require a resting period. Cut back goldenglow severely and it will flower again.

Fall plowing of land intended for vegetable growing next season should be under way. Old sod soil or weed patches that can be utilized as a garden respond very well to fall plowing, but when plowed in spring much labor is necessary to get it into condition for planting.

Saturday, Aug. 29

The calla lily is a fine plant for home use in the winow and it should be potted now. The size of the roots [rhizomes] vary from the small to those 8 inches or more in length and pots of suitable size should be used. The plants require abundant food and copious amounts of water when well established. Even when out of flower the plants are attractive.

Watch for mildew and other fungus disease. The standard spray is Bordeaux mixture and sulphur dust for rust and mildew. Remove deadwood from shrubs and trees. It is easy to distinguish while the leaves are on the plants.

Early Fire Hero

Peter Kipley, said once to have been known as the nation's No. 1 firefighter, is pictured wearing the medal he won as champion in an international competition in a quick bunk room and hitch event 64 years ago. He carries what is said to have been the last fireman's amplifying trumpet used in the city. Trumpet and medal are owned by his son, Peter F. Kipley, 9047 Muskegon avenue.

KIPLEYS BOAST 87 YEAR RECORD AS FIRE FIGHTERS

1850s. After joining in 1855, he continued as a volunteer fire fighter until after the great fire of 1871, in which his son, Peter, had a real baptism of fire. He had become a volunteer shortly before.

Lawrence Franz felt strongly the need for fire protection even before the fire which nearly ruined the city. In his precinct he was a strong supporter of Joseph Medill, editor of THE TRIBUNE, who was elected mayor in November on a "fireproof" ticket.

Medill extended the fire department organization and Peter Kipley became a regular member of the new department in what was the outlying district near MacGregor [24th] and Canal streets.

Gold Medal Is Prized Relic.

For his quick bunk and harness performance, Peter received a large gold medal, suspended on chains from a gold name bar. This and a fireman's speaking trumpet, forerunner of present loud speaking equipment, are now prized relics owned by Peter F. Kipley.

Peter the elder continued with the Chicago fire department until 1888, when he was delegated to organize the Riverdale department.

Fire Station in Back Yard.

Afterward Peter and his three sons and two sons-in-law maintained a fire department in their own back yard, with a one horse truck supplied by the city. This continued until 1914 when paid departments displaced it. In the back yard fire department were the father and his sons, Peter F., Lawrence, and Edward, and sons-in-law, John Neering, now of Decatur, Ind., and William A. Reich, Riverdale.

Now Lawrence Jr. and his brother, Donald, are in the Dolton fire department and Edward A. Kipley Jr. is an auxiliary volunteer with the paid Riverdale department. Peter III., son of Peter F., is 19 years old, but shows little flair for fire work, his father said, with slight concern.

Peter F. was Dolton fire marshal for a two year term—1927-'28—and his brother, Lawrence, followed him in the office for two years.

FAMILY REUNION OF TONS FINDS 31 NOW FIGHTERS

Every one attending the annual Ton family reunion Thursday at the Thornton forest preserve will sign a letter which will be sent to the 31 members of the family who are now in military service. Photostatic copies will be made from the letter written and signed at the reunion, the 47th meeting of the family. Prizes for games and races at the meeting will be defense bonds and stamps. Some 200 members of the family are in the Netherlands, but since the German invasion no word has been received from them.

ELSON, SAVAGE IN BROADCAST OF ALL-STAR GAME

Event Friday Is Ninth Straight for Bob.

Bob Elson and Guy Savage, W-G-N veteran sports announcers, have been selected to air W-G-N and the Mutual network's exclusive broadcast of the ninth annual Chicago Bears-College All-Stars football game direct from Soldiers' field from 9 to 11:30 p. m. next Friday.

Elson, who will be broadcasting his ninth straight All-Star game, will give the play-by-play account while Savage will supply the color and background material.

The game is sponsored by Chicago Tribune Charities, Inc., with the proceeds going to the Army Emergency and Navy Relief funds. According to advance estimates, the service charities will receive approximately $160,000 as more than 100,000 persons will witness the game. This crowd will assure the All-Star event first place in sports donations for any single game.

The Bears are champions of the National Professional Football league while the All-Stars were selected in newspaper and radio polls all over the country from the ranks of last season's outstanding seniors.

Bob Zuppke, former head coach at the University of Illinois, will direct the All-Stars' squad of 62 men. His assistants will be Oregon State's Lon Steiner, Texas Aggies' Homer Norton, Northwestern's Burt Ingwersen, and Notre Dame's Frank Leahy. The Chicago Bears are piloted by George Halas, owner-coach.

Nursery Picnic Today.

The Daughters of Jacob Day and Night nursery, 6401 South Peoria street, will hold its annual picnic today at Ryan's woods, 87th street and Western avenue.

GRAIN ELEVATOR A HUGE BASTION OF HOME FRONT

Food for Nation Pours Into Great Bins.

BY CHARLES WRIGHT.

Wheat from the summer harvest in the northwestern states soon will be stored in South Chicago elevators. Thousands of bushels already gathered by the combines are now moving toward Chicago, bread basket of the nation.

While forecasting harvests is usually difficult, Chicago grain men predict there will be littl variance from last year in the amount of grain stored in south side elevrtors this year. Principal problem imposed by the war is transportation. Most of the wheat, corn, rye, or soy beans is transported by railway. Rail facilities have become doubly taxed since the war began and American industry hit its stride.

Boat Facilities Lost.

Formerly about 10 per cent of the grain was moved by boat, now almost discounted as all available boats are carrying iron ore to the steel mills in the annual race against the ice. Grain men admit the possibility that the amount of grain passing thru the elevators may be decreased by the amount formerly carried by the boats.

Figures for the amounts of grain handled last year by Chicago elevators follow: Received, 174,965,000 bushels; shipped out, 80,123,000 bushels. The difference of 94,842,000 bushels was utilized by Chicago industries. A breakdown in rail transportation by the type of grain shows: Corn, 81,717,000 bushels; oats, 19,840,000 bushels; wheat, 18,411,000 bushels; barley, 13,823,000 bushels, and rye, 2,352,000 bushels. The legume crop of soy beans in storage was 11,541,000 bushels.

Keystone in War.

A war industry is usually pictured in terms of planes, tanks, and shells moving off the assembly line. But modern war has changed the old conception. The need for food plus the use of grain alcohol in the manufacture of explosives, has placed the grain elevators on a war footing. More than half the grain stored and cleaned by the Calumet elevator, representative of the industry, belongs to the government.

Wheat from the southeast has almost all been harvested and stored in the elevators and in many cases already is in the hands of the manufacturer. Corn from Iowa, Illinois, and Indiana will begin to pour into the chutes of the elevators in October. Some grain is brought to south side elevators by truck, especially from nearby farms in Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, and Indiana. This amount is a very small part of the total.

Vigilant Against Dust.

Speed in moving the grain from the vehicles which transport it to the elevators is the most important factor in this industry. Speed is more necessary now that freight railway cars must be kept constantly on the move in the battle of transportation, one of the most important of the home fronts in time of war,

The Calumet elevator, one of the most modern in the world and newest in Chicago, was the scene in 1939 of one of the most disastrous explosions and fires in elevator history. Nine men lost their lives. The new elevator has one of the most modern dust collecting systems. A dozen men are sweeping constantly to reduce the hazard of explosion and to prevent fire from spontaneous combustion.

As most of the grain is brought by rail the chief unloading device is the car dump, a mechanism that can unload a car of 2,000 bushels in little more than three minutes. This is faster than suction and does not damage the grain. Clamps grip the freigth car which has been rolled onto a turntable. The car tips to one side, the door is opened, and to empty it the car is tipped first on one end then on the other at a 45 degree angle. About 80 cars may be emptied in eight hours by this method.

The Calumet elevator has a capacity of approximately 3,000,000 bushels.

Blue Island Girl to Be Wed

Miss Dorothea Searle, daughter of Mrs. Edward Searle of Blue Island, will be married Saturday, Sept. 26, to Franklin Greves, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Greves, also of Blue Island. Mr. Greves is a student at the Chicago Aeronautical university. The ceremony will be solemnized in Blue Island. [Shipley Photo.]

Walter F. Terrell, oldest boating enthusiast on the Calumet river, retired from his plumbing business four years ago. He will be 78 years old Dec. 1. But when the war brought a boom in building and created a shortage in man power he deserted his hobby and again took up his wrenches.

He works only under one condition—the work must be either at a war industry or an army cantonment. Jobs at which he has worked since the war started include a munitions plant in Tennessee and Camp Atterbury, Indiana. In a few weeks he plans to do plumbing work at a new cantonment near Sparta, Wis.

Injures Knee at Camp.

Mr. Terrell, who resides at 3155 5th avenue, has been recovering from a knee injury he suffered while at Camp Atterbury. Most of this time has been spent with his boat, the Mallard, which he keeps at the Harbor Lights Boat club, 137th street and Torrence avenue. This craft, a combination sail and motor boat, once was a 26 foot lifeboat aboard a lake steamer.

He bought the boat for a box of cigars six years ago. It had been condemned by an inspector but Mr. Terrell believed it to be in good condition. When he asked the price the captain said he could have the boat if he bought the crew cigars. However, the cost of building a cabin, installing a mast, and the motor, amounted to around $400.

On Lake Calumet Since 1884.

His experience in boating on the Calumet river and Lake Calumet dates to 1884 when he came to Lake Calumet to witness a sculling race. Nearby he saw a small sailboat, called a "skimming dish," and bought it for $118. He has boated on the lake and river every year since then. His preference is sailing.

Mr. Terrell is a slight, active, gray haired man with certain of the facial characteristics of the old New England clipper ship captains. He was born on the west side of Chicago and recalls vividly the great fire of 1871. His family then lived at Coolidge and Sampson streets, now 13th and Throop streets.

Terrell said few of his friends who had boated with him when he first began to come to the Calumet area are now living.

Mallard His 8th Craft.

The Mallard is the eighth boat he has owned. He usually has named his boats after waterfowl or water flowers. Examples are the Loon and the Lotus. Mr. Terrell pointed out that when he began boating on Lake Calumet he sailed over much of what now is marsh and impassable for a boat.

SEEK VOLUNTEER AIDS FOR WORK AT SETTLEMENT

War Demands Curtail South Side Service.

This is one of a series of stories on how the war is affecting the city's charitable institutions.

World War I. fostered an agency which grew into the South Side Settlement house. World War II, has endangered the program of this organization.

The settlement, with its headquarters in a former residence at 3201 Wabash avenue, was formed in 1918 as an agency in many ways similar to the USO. The organization then was called the South Side Soldiers' and Sailors' center, a part of the program to meet the recreational needs of service men stationed in Chicago. Such centers were located in various parts of the city.

Has Had One Leader.

Mrs. Ada McKinley, head resident, has been with the organization from the beginning. She has seen three phases of the agency's work: as a service men's center, a community center, and a settlement house. Mrs. McKinley has given her service to the organization without pay. While the settlement is in the heart of the Negro section its use is not restricted to the single racial group. It is nonsectarian.

Soon after the armistice the organization ended its function as a service men's center. The name was changed to South Side Community center.

In 1926 it was changed from a community center to a settlement house. Mrs. McKinley explained that as a community center the organization did little more than provide a meeting place for various groups in the area.

Play School and Dramatics.

The theory of a settlement, Mrs. McKinley explained, is that such an organization works with every age group of the family. The program at South Side Settlement house includes a play school for very young children of the community; organized recreation such as craft work for the 8 and 12 year old group; dramatics, clubs, and interest groups for the teen ages, and an educational program in addition to recreation for the adults.

The war has added to certain phases of work and at the same time has made it more and more difficult to obtain workers to carry out the program. Before the cut in the WPA program there were 14 workers at the settlement. Now there are four. The work of the others has been replaced by volunteer staff members, but they are increasingly more difficult to obtain.

Recent Bride

Part 6 | Music Drama Movies

Chicago Sunday Tribune

THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER

AUGUST 23, 1942

Part 6 | Homemakers Education

Once upon a time Donna Reed lived on a farm in Denison, Ia. She's in the movies now. Her most recent pictures are "The Courtship of Andy Hardy," "Apache Trail," and "The War Against Mrs. Hadley."

Right: Ruth Warrick made her screen debut in "Citizen Kane." She then appeared in "Obliging Young Lady." Soon you'll be seeing her in "Journey Into Fear," an Orson Welles production.

Above: Meet (photographically) Jane Russell, now starring in Howard Hughes' latest picture, "The Outlaw." Miss Russell is a newcomer to the screen.

Priscilla Lane and Cary Grant were being very intense when they were snapped for this still. It's from a scene in "Arsenic and Old Lace," screened from the stage play and soon to be released.

'Good Night Ladies' Theater Phenomenon of the Year

Keeps Packing Them In at the Blackstone

By Cecil Smith.

Every Monday afternoon for the last 18 weeks Joe Keefe, the press agent for "Good Night, Ladies," has worn the same beaming smile at our weekly press conference. Nothing delights him more than to be asked about the box office receipts of the preceding week, unless perhaps he prefers to be asked when his play is likely to close at the Blackstone theater. Occasionally he pulls a long face, just for a change, when I ask him about business, and says in tones of mock complaint, "We fell off a little last week; we had a few seats left for the Monday performance." And that is all he can find to complain about. Indeed, he seems the happiest of men.

Not because I had the slightest suspicion of Mr. Keefe's roseate disposition, but because I wanted to see with my own eyes Chicago's most remarkable theater phenomenon of the year, I went back to the Blackstone last Monday, to see how "Good Night, Ladies" looked, and how its audience behaved, at the beginning of the 19th week of the run.

My choice of a Monday was deliberate, for if a theater is not doing good business the rest of the week, it usually looks as deserted as a country cemetery on Monday. It was a tonic experience, therefore, to one who loves to see a full theater as sincerely as I do, to behold the teeming crowd of patrons at the Blackstone. It wasn't a capacity audience, to be sure, but the vacant seats were few and scattered and very far in the rear.

The audience provides half the show at "Good Night, Ladies." On your return visit, when you do not have to concentrate upon the theme of the play, you will have fun studying the mass reaction. The first few moments are quiet, with only a tepid laugh or two puncturing the silence. But in short order the handsomely equipped young ladies begin to appear, one by one. The wonder of their physical endowment impresses the audience quickly, and from the very look of the cast every one is persuaded that he is really going to get his money's worth after all. It is good showmanship to reassure the customers thus early, for it means that they give their full and uninhibited coöperation for the rest of the evening.

In professional theatrical circles there is inevitably a great deal of speculation about "Good Night, Ladies." How was it possible, every one asks, to refurbish so corny and ancient a farce as "Ladies' Night in a Turkish Bath," which was no sensational success even in 1918, and make a salable commodity of it in 1942?

Al Rosen, the producer, maintains that all you have to do to achieve certain box office success is to mix sex and slapstick in well balanced quantities. I agree, of course, that one or the other of these basic ingredients is likely to interest about 99 per cent of the human race. But many another producer has tried to discover the recipe for combining these elements profitably, and has failed to make a palatable dish out of them.

I had never thought until now of accusing Mr. Rosen of great modesty, but it occurs to me that he fails to state an important aspect of his case. He neglects to mention the fact that "Good Night, Ladies" is extremely well written and equally well acted. In its bawdier way, the text is written with an eye to effect as shrewd as George Kaufman's; the pace is fast, the prevailing mood of the dialog is full of zest, and the wisecracks are well placed and perfectly timed. There are even a few literary allusions at which the highbrow can laugh, altho I am sure nobody would insist that a college education is necessary to understand the odd antics of the college professor impersonated by Buddy Ebsen.

• • •

The acting, too, remains on an expert Broadway level. The comic gifts of Mr. Ebsen and Skeets Gallagher, which have been objects of admiration on the part of the press and public alike, are of the experienced variety in which skilful calculation of every effect is hidden behind an outward impression of spontaneity. But the stars are not alone in their expertness. As I think I observed with unfeigned surprise at the opening of "Good Night, Ladies," Mr. Rosen has somehow accomplished the astonishing feat of finding a group of amazingly attractive young women all of whom are legitimately able to act.

Because Mr. Rosen realizes that a good idea has to be well and honestly presented to attain big time success, his plans for a new production are worth telling, altho the fruition of the project still lies some months in the future. He is hard at work on the preparatory phases of something called "Harem Scarem," in which a series of chills will be interwoven with his two essentials, sex and farce. For one thing, a horrendous python is going to put in its appearance in the harem.

• • •

Two successful playwrights, Fred Ballard and Milton H. Gropper, are now preparing the script out in Hollywood. Mr. Ballard is the author of "Ladies of the Jury" and "Young America." With a strange parallel of titles, Mr. Gropper wrote "Ladies of the Evening" and "We Americans." "Harem Scarem" has not yet reached the casting phase. When it is ready, and when "Good Night, Ladies" is thru at the Blackstone, Mr. Rosen will bring the new farce into the same theater.

Do you ask when that will be? The only answer is, Who knows? Theater programs in New York advertise that "Good Night, Ladies" is "coming in October." I taxed Mr. Rosen with duplicity, since he keeps telling me that there will be a New Year's eve performance of "Good Night, Ladies" right here at the Blackstone. But you can't trap that resourceful little fellow. His rejoinder was a classic of confident optimism, "Did I say what October?"

"THE MOON IS DOWN"

Arthur Peterson Jr., as Mayor Orden, and Lou Krugman, as Col. Lanser, play important roles in the Actors' Company of Chicago production of John Steinbeck's drama.

Notes of the Theater

"Best Foot Forward," George Abbott's musical comedy with a cast of youngsters, opens the fall theatrical season at the Erlanger theater two weeks from tonight, Sept. 6. The musical ran all thru last season in New York, and the tunes by Hugh Martin and Ralph Blane—notably the football song called "Buckle Down, Winsocki"—have become very popular. In addition to the under-age talent, the cast includes Joy Hodges of the movies and Marty May, a comedian last seen here in "Three After Three." One of the featured young performers is a singing Chicago girl, Maureen Cannon.

Joy Hodges.

The Theater Guild and the American Theater society have extended to three weeks the subscription period of each of their jointly sponsored plays next season. Chicago now becomes the first city outside New York to support a three-week list of Theater Guild subscribers. The extension of the period was made because of an unprecedentedly heavy demand for season tickets. The guild feels especially happy about the public's demand for seats, in view of the fact that only one play out of the six has been definitely announced. The first subscription play will be "Spring Again," with Grace George and C. Aubrey Smith, opening at the Selwyn theater on Oct. 5. The subscription office in the Erlanger theater is open daily; those who act quickly may obtain choice locations for the third week of each play.

At last, a closing date for "My Sister Eileen" has been announced. If you have not seen the gay Greenwich village comedy, which is being presented at popular prices, you will have to make your way to the Harris theater before Sept. 19, or miss it forever. When its last four weeks in Chicago are over, the merry piece will start off on another tour, hunting out cities and towns which were missed in last season's peregrinations. On Sept. 19, "My Sister Eileen" will complete its 50th week in Chicago. The present return engagement accounts for 18 weeks of the total.

The departure of "My Sister Eileen" serves to clinch the opening date of "Junior Miss." This new Max Gordon attraction will follow the old one into the Harris on Sept. 21, and if Chicago's response parallels New York's, it may some day be in a position to exceed the run record of "My Sister Eileen." In a week or two we shall no doubt be able to provide details concerning the cast of "Junior Miss."

From "The Moon Is Down," the John Steinbeck drama now being presented by the Actors Company of Chicago at 218 South Wabash avenue, comes the request that we make the schedule clear. So here it is: Performances every Wednesday, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday. No performances Monday, Tuesday, or Thursday. No matinées at any time.

The Port Players, the notable summer stock company at Shorewood, Wis., announce Robert Sherwood's comedy, "Reunion in Vienna," as the tenth and next to last play of their season. Performances will be given nightly from Wednesday thru Sunday. The final play, opening Sept. 3, will probably be "Morning's at Seven," a comedy by Paul Osborn which has not been produced professionally in this region. In "Reunion in Vienna" Morton Da Costa and Helene Ambrose will play the rôles of the two sweethearts who are reunited, and Edmund C. Wilkes will direct.

"What a Life" will be the attraction at Michiana Shores theater from Thursday thru Saturday. Principals in the cast will be Frank Fowler, Paul Mikota, Richard Kiley, Maxime Cooper, Dorothy Wilkinson, and Mary Ann Burgeon. The director is Letitia V. Barnum.

A season of Yiddish entertainment will reopen the Douglas Park theater, Ogden and Kedzie avenues, on Sept. 21. The first bill will be Sholom Secunda's new operetta, "'The Street Singers." Menachim Rubin, recently seen at the Civic Opera house in "Bar Kochba," will be the guest star. There will be a cast of 25.

"This Is the Army," the all-soldier musical comedy with a score by Irving Berlin, will extend its New York engagement to Sept. 26. Since its opening on July 4 the show has topped all other Broadway musicals in its weekly grosses. After the end of the New York run the musical comedy will tour the key cities.

"Show Time," the George Jessel vaudeville show which was once said to be heading this way from the Pacific coast, will skip Chicago and go directly to Broadway, opening there next month.

Tallulah Bankhead will be costarred with Fredric Marsh and Florence Eldridge in Thornton Wilder's new play, "Skin of Our Teeth." Rehearsals begin Sept. 15. Miss Bankhead had thought of going to London to act Regina Giddens in "The Little Foxes," but transportation difficulties made her change her mind.

Cornelia Otis Skinner, wondering what the new season may hold for her, will appear at Maplewood, N. J., the week of Sept. 21 in Rumer Godden's dramatization of her own novel, "Black Narcissus." Miss Skinner's rôle will require her to portray a sister superior of an Anglican convent in the Himalayas. Lee Strasberg will direct the play, which is being produced by Cheryl Crawford.

"The House Without a Key," Jean Lee Latham's dramatization of Earl Derr Biggers' Charlie Chan story, continues each Saturday and Sunday evening at the little theater of the Delaware players, 180 East Delaware place. Over Labor day week-end performances will be omitted. In the fall the Delaware players expect to produce a new play once a month, with performances for four consecutive week-ends.

Bobby Clark, the wondrous funny man, celebrates his 40th anniversary on the stage on Wednesday. He is now appearing in New York in Michael Todd's "Star and Garter." Bobby first acted on the stage in Springfield, O., in May, 1902, as the attendant in "Mrs. Jarley's Waxworks," but since he was not paid he dates his professional career from his appearance with the Stimmel and Smith circus in Springfield on Aug. 26 of the same year. He was an acrobat in the circus.

Notes of Music and Musicians

Jeanette MacDonald, the famous film soprano, will give a recital at the Civic Opera house Friday, Sept. 11, for Army Emergency relief, it was announced last week by Harry Zelzer, Chicago concert manager. The program will consist largely of folk songs and light classics, but songs from Miss MacDonald's movie successes no doubt will have a place. The accompanist is to be Guiseppe Bamboschek, widely known as a conductor of opera.

Jeanette MacDonald.

The Illinois WPA Symphony orchestra under Albert Goldberg's direction will give a concert on the campus of the Morgan Park Military academy at 8:15 Tuesday evening under the auspices of the Military Park Community Office of Civilian Defense. This will be the final concert of the Morgan Park summer series. The program consists of Beethoven's overture to "Fidelio," Schubert's third symphony, excerpts from Berlioz's "The Damnation of Faust," Johann Strauss' "On the Beautiful Blue Danube," and "Pizzicato Polka," Grainger's "Mock Morris," Sanders' "Saturday Night" [a barn dance], and Tschaikowsky's "Capriccio Italien."

The Metropolitan Opera association of New York, in a recent statement of its financial condition, revealed that its operating deficit for the season of 1941-'42 was $148,550.84 and that the cost of new productions that year was $65,823.55. However, there is a pleasanter side to the Metropolitan's statement. The Metropolitan Opera fund [which was raised by an intensive nation-wide campaign and which amounted originally to over a million dollars] is nowhere near exhausted even after the huge disbursements incident to the purchase of the Metropolitan Opera house and warehouse properties and the refurbishing of the house. There is still $305,934.10 remaining. This, combined with general cash on hand after 1941-'42 losses have been deducted, equals the sum of $417,437.20 in cash reserves as of last May 31.

The National High School orchestra, in the final concert of its season at the National Music camp, Interlochen, Mich., tonight, will play Harl McDonald's symphonic poem, "Bataan," under the direction of Pvt. Thor Johnson, U. S. A. . . . William Revelli, University of Michigan band director, will appear as guest conductor of the camp band at this afternoon's concert.

The Board of Directors and State and District President's council of the National Federation of Music Clubs will hold a four day meeting at Providence, R. I., beginning next Sunday. The principal business of the meeting will be to decide how the federation may best serve America's cultural interests without weakening the war effort in any way.

André Wehrle, organist of City church, Gary, Ind., will give a recital at Rockefeller Memorial chapel at 7 o'clock tonight. At its close, there will be carillon music by Frederick Marriott. The Wednesday organ recital [also at 7] will be given by Hazel Atherton Quinney, organist of the University Church of the Deciples of Christ.

Free Band Concerts in Outlying Parks: The A. F. Thaviu band will play in Lincoln park tonight. Soloists are Florence Bernstein, soprano, and Ben Landsman, baritone. . . . The Chicago Woman's Concert band, Lillian Poenisch, conductor, will be heard in Jackson park tonight with Monna Van contributing soprano solos and Margaret Beringer and Jeannette Reed a trumpet duo. . . . Friday evening the Thaviu band will play in Garfield park. Soloists are to be Paula Knight, soprano, and Lawrence Davidson, baritone. All concerts start at 8 o'clock and last approximately two hours.

Riverview Park Opens 39th Mardi Gras Fete

The 39th annual Mardi gras celebration, annual closing feature at Riverview park, opened last night and will continue thru Sept. 13, the last day of the park's 1942 season. A highlight of the Mardi gras, which turns the park's 144 acres into a huge promenade for floats and gaily costumed patrons, will be the Tournament of Music. Nearly a hundred schools and organizations will be represented in the music and marching contests, awards for which will be on the closing night. As has been the custom all summer, the park will admit service men in uniform free.

Grant Park Offers Some Unusual Features This Week

Muriel Rahn to Sing There on Saturday

By Edward Barry.

A glance at this week's Grant park programs will reveal several unusual features. The most important from the standpoint of news value is the appearance Saturday evening of the young Negro soprano, Muriel Rahn. She will sing with a symphony orchestra conducted by Ennio Bolognini. She gave a very successful recital here last spring, but was heard by only a tiny fraction of the people who will have an opportunity to make acquaintance with her next Saturday. She was highly praised for her voice quality and her musicality.

Muriel Rahn.

By the way, versatile Miss Rahn is an actress as well as a singer and expects to appear in S. N. Behrman's "The Pirate" on Broadway in September. Later in the fall she will sing the name part in "Carmen Jones," an all-colored version of Bizet's "Carmen."

• • •

On Thursday night Grant park patrons will hear one of the most serious programs in the history of the lake front concerts. The W-G-N orchestra under Henry Weber's direction will present Sibelius' first symphony, and Michael Wilkomirski, the orchestra's concertmaster, will be heard in the solo part of the Brahms violin concerto. The program's two other items—Mozart's overture to "Don Giovanni" and the prelude and love death from Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde"—are on a similar lofty plane.

Tuesday evening the band shell will be the scene of a mass naval induction ceremony, and a great variety of radio celebrities from W-G-N, NBC, and CBS will present a special program. Mayor Kelly will speak, and Janis Porter will sing a new song dedicated to him, "Buy a Share in America." All this will begin about 9:30, and will follow a concert by Col. Armin F. Hand's American Legion band in the course of which the Chicago soprano, Mildred Gerber, will sing two solos.

• • •

This by no means exhausts the novel features of the week. Tonight the NBC Symphony orchestra under Roy Shield's direction and several NBC artists are presenting a serious concert program and a light radio program separated only by an intermission. Tomorrow an unfamiliar pianist, Victor La Bunski, will take part in the Jerzy Bojanowski concert postponed from last night. Wednesday the mezzo-soprano, Marguerite Bost, wife of a prominent Chicago business man, W. D. Bost, will make her first Grant park appearance under Richard Czerwonky's direction. Friday the dramatic soprano Anna Kruetgen, wife of Chicago's postmaster, Ernest J. Kruetgen, makes her second Grant park appearance of the summer—this time with the Woman's Symphony orchestra under Nicolai Malko's direction.

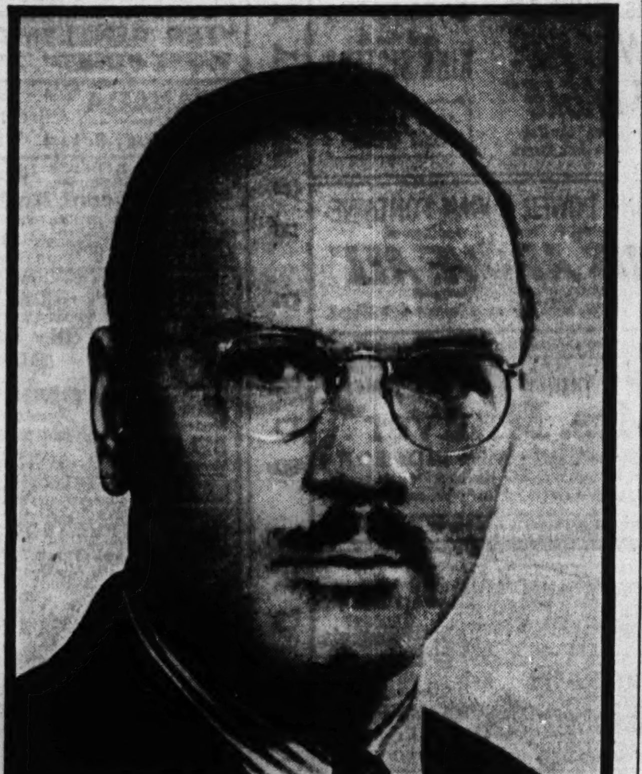
SOLOIST AT FREE CONCERT



Michael Wilkomirski, concertmaster of the W-G-N orchestra, will play the solo part of the Brahms violin concerto at Grant park Thursday night under Henry Weber's direction.

Helen Traubel Concludes Season of 80 Concerts

Helen Traubel, the American soprano who made two hugely successful appearances at Ravinia park last summer, recently concluded a taxing season of more than 80 concerts. Among her prospects for next year is an appearance at the Metropolitan as Isolde in Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde."

Juilliard School Will Publish Van Vactor Work

The "Overture to a Comedy," by David Van Vactor, Chicago composer and a flutist of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, has been chosen for publication this year by the Juilliard School of Music. The first symphony of Robert E. Ward also was selected.

Illinois Tech Trains Civilians for War Work

By the Rev. John Evans.

Eighteen thousand Illinois trained civilians are fighting Hitler. They are not fighting with guns and tanks but with gauges, tools, test tubes, mathematics, and trained minds.

These 18,000 civilians are the students and graduates of Illinois Institute of Technology's engineering, science, and management war training program. They make the Illinois Tech program by far the largest defense training set-up operating in any single city.

These 18,000 also give Illinois Tech what authorities claim as the unique honor of having trained more defense technicians than any other privately operated school in the nation. Only three schools thruout the nation have trained technicians in figures more pretentious—one of them thru mass education in extension courses, the other two in classes spread over state-wide areas. All three are state owned and operated schools. Illinois Tech has not trained its 18,000 thru the mails.

• • •

The aircraft industry is a good example of Illinois Tech's work. More than 200 firms in Chicago are now building appliances for wartime aircraft, turning out engines, wings, and completed craft. For that industry, Illinois Tech trained 960 technicians at the top of industry's personnel triangle. One plant, already familiar with Illinois Tech's training, made an early bid and took more than 600 of the 960. Another manufacturer managed to get only one—and asked for more; the rest were spread out among the rest of the 200 plants.

Illinois Tech offered the nation's first course in synthetic rubber. One hundred and eight men are studying in that field. Several other schools have since adopted the course.

Industrial safety engineering is one of Illinois Tech's chief courses. The institute is training 1,092 men in that field out of a national total of 4,725, by far the largest single group.

A total of 1,111 persons are studying industrial supervision, described as the largest single group in that phase of study.

• • •

Each day and night, thousands of Chicagoans travel to Illinois Tech's classrooms—not to become graduate engineers but to take away specialized knowledge to help them build more and better planes, tanks, and shells.

Exactly 18,220 have enrolled in Illinois Tech's defense training courses to date, and of that number 10,762 have finished the courses, and are now at work in Chicago's war industries. Of the remainder, 3,387 are still studying. By fall they will have finished their preparatory work, and Illinois Tech's trained men in Chicago war industry will approach the 14,000 mark.

Already, according to a Chicago ordnance official, there is not a single war industry in the Chicago area where technical personnel and leadership does not include at least one Illinois Tech trained man.

Defense training at Illinois Tech is of the short course type. Depending upon the subject, the course varies from 8 to 16 weeks of intensive specialized training in some particular field, with the majority of the courses being either 12 or 16 weeks in length.

The courses vary also in intensity from a one hour lecture period three times a week or daily, to full time 40 hour per week classes. Courses of the latter variety include such things as ordnance inspector training, industrial chemistry, and engineering drafting. They virtually force the student to abandon all other activities during the training period.

The training is offered under the auspices of the United States Office of Education which finances it, and was established late in 1940 by that office, with the assistance of America's leading engineering educators. A staff of more than 300 persons, under the direction of John I. Yellott, are administering the program. Yellott is chairman of the committee on defense training at the institute.

Novotna and Peerce.

Jarmila Novotna, soprano, and Jan Peerce, tenor both known to patrons of the Chicago Opera company, appeared this summer as soloists on an all-Viennese program in Philadelphia's Robin Hood dell.

CLASSICAL RECORDINGS

Fritz Kreisler, apparently fully recovered from the injuries he received in a street accident last year, has recorded for Victor six of the tuneful little pieces of his own that his recital audiences always demand. That Kreisler as well as his listeners enjoys these six is indicated by the title of the album: "These Are My Favorites."

The pieces are "Caprice Viennois," "Tambourin Chinois," "Liebesfreud," "Liebeslied." "La Gitana," and "Schön Rosemarin." All have been provided with new orchestrations by the composer himself. The performance on the recordings usues the Victor Symphony orchestra. The conductor is Charles O'Connell.

The album is full of those little stylistic touches which help make Kreisler's playing such a delight. Subtle accents and rubatos give the melodies gaiety and life. The violinist's limitless variety of tone colorings enables him to differentiate effectively between such contrasting pieces as the flowing, sentimental "Caprice Viennois" and the piquant "Tambourin Chinois."

Contract According to Culbertson

By Ely Culbertson.

[Copyright: 1942: By Ely Culbertson.]

Bridge is not an exact science, even in the department of play. Correct procedure against one type of defender may be decidedly incorrect against a different type. Thus, a declarer's first duty is to appraise his opponents, to decide how far their capabilities extend, and to guide himself accordingly. Let us apply this general advice to a specific case.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 diamond	1 spade	2 no trump	Pass
3 no trump	Pass	Pass	Pass

West opened the spade three. [Note that this is the proper method of leading from a suit which partner has bid, when the no trump has been bid over partner.] East smothered dummy's jack and returned the spade seven. Declarer, directing a glare full of suspicion at his right hand opponent, put in the queen with an air of "You've got a nerve trying to fool me!" . . . and was both horrified and disgusted when West pounced on the trick with the king and returned a spade which permitted East to collect four more tricks. The diamond finesse being right, declarer was able to take the balance—indeed, the defenders were quite gracious in their concession.

The situation involved in this deal is one which arises frequently and invariably is a source of annoyance to every declarer, expert or average. The solution to declarer's correct play at the second trick lies in an accurate appraisal of both opponents. First, the moment a good player in West's position leads a low card to his partner's bid, there is the strong assumption that he is leading from an honor. Second, tho that honor may be as low as the ten spot, it is more likely to be a higher card—one capable of trapping a minor honor in declarer's hand. The next consideration deals with East's plays. An experienced and cagey player in the East position, whose suit is headed by A-K, is fully capable of putting up the ace on the first trick, then underplaying the king in an effort to lead declarer astray. But this combination of plays [first, the false card of the ace; second, the underlead of the king] requires considerable imagination, and is rarely made by any defender short of the expert class. Thus, in the above deal it was up to declarer to appraise his right hand opponent, to determine whether he was capable of the described bit of deception. The mere fact that East had overcalled with a spade certainly did not mark him with the ace and king. The entire question declarer was called upon to solve was whether East had such a holding as A-K-x-x-x, which would leave West with the 10-x-x-x, or whether the spade king was held by West. Unless South knew East to be a fine player, he should have ducked to the second lead in the hope of blocking the suit.

Obviously, a second round duck would have had precisely that effect. West would have won with the nine and cashed the king, but East never could have regained the lead.

An article by Mr. Culbertson appears in the feature section of The Tribune each weekday.

Hearts are trump, and South leads. North and South are to win all the tricks against any defense.

Solution: South leads the seven of spades, which North ruffs. North leads one round of trumps, so that South may discard the same suit that East discards, which cannot be a spade, or all South's would be good. North immediately leads the discarded suit. This South wins and leads ace and another spade, North trumping the third round and leading his fourth trump to force diamonds.

Suppose East's first discard is a club. South lets go the small club, then leads to the club king. Now the spade ace is cashed and North discards a diamond. The spade nine is ruffed by North and the last trump squeezes both defenders. East must hold the spade queen, hence must discard the diamond 10. South thereupon abandons the spade jack. West must hold a club to guard dummy's eight spot, hence cannot keep two diamonds.

New War Film Tells Tale of Nazi Sabotage

"SABOTAGE SQUAD"
Produced by Columbia
Directed by Lew Landers
Presented at the Oriental

THE CAST:

Lieutenant John Cronin	Bruce Benett
Edith Cassell	Kay Harris
Eddie Miller	Eddie Norris
Carlysle Harrison	Sidney Blackmer
Chief Hanley	Don Beddoe
Robert Fuller	John Tyrrell
Chuck Brown	George McKay
Conrad	Robert Emmett Keane
Felix	Eddie Laughton

By Cecil Smith.

The newest in Columbia's seemingly unending stream of war pictures is a fast moving, hit-and-run tale recounting the discovery and undoing of a Nazi saboteur. Tho the film employs most of the standard formulas of most stories of crime and pursuit, the plot has enough vitality and suspense to hold the interest thruout.

The story focuses upon Sidney Blackmer, who masks his ugly work as a saboteur under the disguise of a scientist's profession. A unique medal identifies him to his underlings among the foreign agents. When George McKay picks his pocket, relieving him of the wallet containing the medal, a chain of circumstances is initiated which leads to the ultimate discovery of the criminal.

While Bruce Bennett, as a detective lieutenant, pushes the search for the still unknown agent, Eddie Miller falls under suspicion because he temporarily is in possession of the medal—for reasons which I will let the film show you. Kay Harris remains innocently on the side lines, as girls are fated to do in such pictures as these. The story ends in a blaze of action, as a truck loaded with purported soap, which is really dynamite, heads toward an airplane factory.

Both Mr. Bennett and Mr. Miller handle their extroverted acting assignments capably. Mr. Blackmer is a menacing smoothie, and Mr. McKay makes a real and sympathetic character out of the paroled pickpocket. The rest of the cast is adequate, tho Miss Harris still seems in the student actress stage.

"Up to Date" Version of "The Mikado" Is Planned

Just when we thought—and perhaps hoped—that "The Mikado" was safely laid away for the duration of the war, up pops the announcement that a light opera company, now in process of formation in New York, plans to produce an "up to date" version to be known as "The Mad Mikado."

Actors' Equity Member Prisoner of Japanese

Actors' Equity, the union to which all professional actors in the legitimate theater belong, recently announced the first prisoner of war among its membership. He is Corp. L. Douglas Rowland, who was attached to an engineering battalion which was in Bataan when that outpost fell to the Japanese.

A Celebrated Musical Comedy to Be Revived

"The Time, The Place, and The Girl," a celebrated musical comedy of yesteryear, is due for a revival this fall. Prominent in the cast will be Joe E. Howard, known to an earlier generation as the author of the ballad called "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now."

SUBURBAN

"That's taken care of," Jim said. "A motorcycle cop picked us up on the boulevard and followed us here. There's probably a general alarm out for you. He'll have to take you in."

"No!" Ann stared at him. "Don't let him!"

"I'll do what I can," Jim promised.

She began suddenly to tremble as the reaction caught up with her and Jim put his hand over hers. They could hear Paul Brand explaining his presence in the apartment and he appeared in the dining room door and came into the kitchen followed by the motorcycle cop and Dan. The cop's eyes leaped directly to Ann.

"You Miss Marshall?" he demanded. "Miss Ann Marshall?"

"Yes," Ann acknowledged.

"I got to take you in," he announced. "They want to talk to you. Where's the telephone?"

"In the bedroom," Ann told him.

"Hold it, Murph," Dan drawled. "What's the hurry?"

"I'm off my post," Murphy explained. "I got to have a good reason. I got one. I'm telling them about it."

"You know who wants Miss Marshall, don't you?" Dan asked.

"Sure, homicide."

"O. K. Let me call the bureau. I'll talk to Capt. Mercer. If I know him, he'd rather talk to Miss Marshall here. Do I know him?"

"Sure," Murphy agreed. "But—— O. K. You call the bureau and then I'll call the station."

"Where's your gun?" he asked.

Paul reddened and grinned sheepishly.

"I didn't bring any," he said. "I never thought of a weapon. The only thing I thought of was getting here in a hurry."

They could hear the rumble of voices from the bedroom. Nobody said anything. They waited. After a few minutes, Dan and Murphy came back again.

Capt. Mercer Gives No Sign of Irritation

Capt. Mercer gave no sign of irritation when he arrived at the apartment with the genial Detective Sergt. Tom Bradley.

"You three men are together every time I look for any one of you," he complained mildly. "I suppose from now on, Miss Marshall will be making it a foursome." He looked toward the motorcycle policeman. "Murphy," he told him, "you're to return to your post. You did a nice piece of work. I know it and so does your captain."

As the gratified Murphy went out, closing the door carefully behind him, the captain's manner changed. He sat down in the chair Bradley had placed for him. It faced the divan on which sat Ann and Jim. Dan O'Malley lounged in a chair flanking the divan on the left. Paul Brand was stiffly erect in one on the right.

"Miss Marshall," he stated. "I've been looking for you since noon. I think you knew it."

"I suspected it, Capt. Mercer," Ann admitted, "and the idea of being questioned by the police about a murder frightened me."

"What made you think we'd want to question you?" he asked casually and his glance fell away from her and touched the others. He seemed no more than politely interested.

"Well, I had been with Jim and Dick Barcland last night and I knew you were questioning both of them and, I don't know, I just got frightened."

"So you came out here and hid," Capt. Mercer nodded. "I suppose you didn't realize that the people who live in this apartment could get in plenty of trouble for letting you stay here."

Ann paled, but kept a hold on herself. "They didn't know," she defended the Higginses. "They were going to Florida and I asked them if I might stay here for a little while."

"O. K.," he waved the matter aside grandly. "It isn't important right now. It's water over the dam. I only wanted to ask you a couple of questions. I hope you'll answer them as clearly as you can."

"I'll try," Ann promised.

"I could ask you them alone," Capt. Mercer seemed uncertain, "but I guess it won't hurt to have Mr. Brand and Mr. Hallard and Mr. O'Malley here listening. Mr. Brand and Mr. Hallard have already answered the question I'm going to ask you. It's about where they were when Mr. Barcland was shot and killed. Mr. Brand, here, was working on some pictures of President Abraham Lincoln in his home on the north side. He says so and so does Grandon, his butler. Mr. Grandon was helping him with the pictures. So we know where Mr. Brand was. Mr. Hallard, here, says he was in bed. And we checked back to his apartment building and we found he was there calling a taxicab right after Mr. Barcland was shot. So you see I know where both of them were, but I don't know where you were, Miss Marshall. Where were you between, say 3 o'clock and 4:30 this morning?"

"I was at home asleep," Ann answered at once.

He seemed scarcely to have heard her answer. His eyes were vague and uninterested. Another thought evidently had come to him.

"Miss Marshall," he asked respectfully, "did you know Miles Barcland very well?"

"No," Ann answered, "Not very well. I'd known him all my life but at a distance. When we were children, I played with Dick and I was in and out of their house and I knew Mrs. Barcland almost as well as I knew my mother. But I knew Miles Barcland only as a shadowy, awesome man who was big and powerful and Dick Barcland's father. I suppose it was because I had a childish awe of him."

"You mean the father of Richard Barcland, your fiancé?"

"I mean Richard Barcland."

"But you are engaged to him."

Ann looked quickly at Jim and then answered, "Yes."

"How did you happen to become engaged to him?" the captain gently asked.

"The usual way."

"Had Miles Barcland anything to do with your decision to marry his son?"

"I had never discussed the matter with Miles Barcland."

Capt. Mercer relaxed in his chair and smiled. "Miss Marshall," he inquired confidentially, "did you ever write any letters you wished you hadn't?"

"A few," Ann answered his smile, "Who hasn't?"

"Did some letters you wish you hadn't written influence you in getting engaged to Dick Barcland?"

"No," Ann said indifferently.

Capt. Mercer seemed puzzled. "What I'm trying to get straight is this, Miss Marshall," he said patiently. "The way I get it, you were engaged to Mr. Hallard, here. And then you broke that engagement to get engaged to Richard Barcland. We hear that Miles Barcland got hold of some letters you wrote and made you break with Mr. Hallard and promise to marry his son. We got it pretty straight that these letters were what Mr. Hallard was looking for this morning when he came across Miles Barcland's body. How much of that is right?"

"I don't know," Ann told him sedately. "What I do know is that I never wrote any such letters."

The captain sighed wearily. "All right, Miss Marshall," he agreed. "Now, young Mr. Barcland—Dick—told us that he went to the apartment twice last night. The first time he went, he saw a young woman in evening dress that he knew and liked. But he can't remember who it was. The second time he went, he met another woman in evening dress. He knew her and he didn't like her, but he can't remember who she was, either. Now, were you one of those women?"

"No, I wasn't," Ann declared.

Capt. Mercer smiled. "Then you won't mind answering this next question. I got to start 'way behind it. When Mr. Hallard finished telephoning for the police after he thought he'd discovered Miles Barcland's body, he picked up a heart-shaped diamond brooch like women wear on their evening dresses. It's a very expensive piece of jewelry." He dipped his hand into his coat pocket and leaned forward suddenly as he pulled it out. The diamond brooch was in his hand. "Did you ever see anything like this before, Miss Marshall?"

"Yes," she said. "I have one quite a lot like it."

"Where is it now?" he asked.

"I'm not sure," she said. "If you'll excuse me, I'll look around the bedroom." She looked inquiringly at the captain.

"Get away from that door," she ordered, "or I'll shoot."

He nodded and she got up and left the room. The captain did not move, but Sergt. Bradley rose and went and stood just outside the bedroom. Ann reappeared almost immediately. She was carrying her handbag. She seemed not to notice the sergeant, who returned and stood near the captain.

"It may be here," she said with the helplessness of a woman who is suddenly called upon to produce something from one of those catch-alls they carry. She threshed with her fingers thru the handbag, peering into its depths. "I was sure I put it in here when I—— yes," she announced triumphantly "here it is."

Ann's Brooch Matches Other One Exactly

She held a twinkling something in her open hand and extended it toward the captain so that the two brooches, exactly alike, scintillated side by side. Slowly but almost in unison, as tho they were puppets governed by the same string, the four men raised their eyes from the brooches to stare at Capt. Mercer. His gaze met theirs. His face was impassive, but it was slowly turning a choleric red. He looked at Ann.

"Where did you get your brooch, Miss Marshall?" he asked in a voice that sounded slightly strangled.

"My father gave it to me," she informed him.

"Did you ever see this one before?" he persisted, a little hopelessly.

"I may have," Ann said. "It's not an unusual design."

Jim could see he didn't believe her completely but there was nothing he could do about it at the moment. When she produced the diamond brooch, she had surprised and disappointed him. He had been so sure that the brooch was hers and that she had been in the Barcland apartment the previous night. It looked as tho she hadn't. But Jim could see he wasn't satisfied. It would only be a little time before his plodding logic would discover Margaret. But in the meantime:

"Mr. O'Malley tells me that somebody called you on the telephone tonight and threatened to kill you," the captain said.

"Yes," Ann verified.

"I see," the captain mused. His eyes touched Jim and went on to Paul Brand. They lingered there an instant and moved to Dan and came right back to Ann. "You realize you've got to have protection. You staying here tonight?"

"No," Ann told him. "I'm going home."

"All right. I'll send Sergt. Bradley with you. Sergeant, when you get there, have a patrolman assigned to guard the building where Miss Marshall's studio is."

"I'd like to take Miss Marshall home," Jim interposed.

"I'd rather you stayed here, Mr. Hallard." The captain was polite but firm. "I'd like a word with you."

"Nice little place," he said as Ann disappeared into the bedroom.

The captain saw the gun from the threshold of the kitchen. It was lying on the table where Ann had placed it when she let Jim in.

"Whose gun is that?" he asked.

"Mine," Jim told him. "I brought it for Miss Marshall."

"A .38," he mused, "so it ain't the one that killed Barcland. Can Miss Marshall handle a gun?"

"Yes," Jim said. "Well enough to defend herself."

"There's so many things I could throw you into the cooler for, Hallard," the captain said, "that I don't know why I leave you at large. Give her back the gun. Tell her not to shoot a policeman."

Jim walked back into the living room with the gun in his hand.

He handed her the gun. "Capt. Mercer," he explained, "says you are to have this."

"All right, Jim," she said. "Be careful." Jim squeezed her hand and she pulled it away. "Thank you, captain," she called over Jim's shoulder and went thru the front door which Sergt. Bradley already had opened.

"I could use more coöperation from you people," Capt. Mercer announced as the door closed behind her. His tone was mild but his eyes were smoldering and his big jaw was set. "What I'd like would be for all of you to forget the whole thing. That may be a lot for me to ask but the next time any of you get in my way, I'll put you where you can't help, even if you want to. Now these whispers, do they tip off anything? You, Hallard and Mr. Brand, have both heard them. Couldn't you get a line on what kind of a person the whisperer is? Any accent or anything? You know. A truck driver and, say a banker talk different."

"No," Jim admitted. "Neither Miss Marshall nor I can even guess whether it is a man or a woman."

"How about you, Mr. Brand?"

"What?" Paul said, startled out of a reverie. "No. Jim is right. You can't tell anything from the whisper. Capt. Mercer, why do you wish us to 'forget the whole thing,' as you express it? I should think you'd welcome any help you could get. A killer is loose and threatening to kill again. Haven't the police any idea as to who it might be? They may kill a dozen people before they are caught—if they are caught."

Capt. Mercer eyed him with speculation and said, "They'll be caught. But what I'd like to know is how did the Whisperer know Miss Marshall was here tonight?"

"I guess I'm responsible for that," Dan said sheepishly. "Jim, here, telephoned me where she was. Mr. Brand and young Barcland were in my office when the call came in and I passed it on to them. Then young Barcland got drunk in a tavern and broadcast it all over the place. Plenty of people heard him. I think the Whisperer was one of them."

"Yeh," the captain agreed thoughtfully. "That could be. Young Barcland is one of my headaches. If there's another murder, he'll be the victim. He knows too much, even if he can't remember it. He saw the person who killed his father. That's why I've had a man on him since he left jail this morning."

"So that's who that man is," Paul interposed. "I knew he was shadowing Dick. I was waiting to tell you about him."

"That's who he is," the captain nodded as the doorbell rang.

Door Opens to Reveal Monoco and Bodyguard

The four men froze where they stood. Dan looked questioningly at the captain. He nodded and Dan stepped lightly to the door and opened it suddenly and wide.

Tony Monoco stood in the hallway, his bright black eyes widening in startled surprise and then lifting past Dan to gaze at the others. His dark pale face went black, noncommittal, his heavy jaw set grimly. Dan caught a movement behind the gangster and saw his bodyguard, a short, trim little man who seemed about to burst from a form-fitting overcoat. His right hand was moving up over the breast of the coat, creeping, Dan knew, toward the automatic that hung in its holster against his left side.

"I guess," Dan suggested, "you and your friend better come in. Capt. Mercer's here."

Monoco stared at him and then stepped lightly thru the door. The torpedo followed him.

"Well, Tony," Capt. Mercer greeted with ponderous joviality, "this is a pleasure. What brings you here?"

"All right," Tony snapped. "What's the rap against Higgins?"

"There's no rap against Higgins," the captain said mildly. "What is he to you?"

"He's my bookkeeper," Tony informed him.

"Do you know Miss Ann Marshall?"

Tony watched him. "I know her to see," he acknowledged. "She's in the papers a lot. And I've seen her with Hallard here. Why?"

"Somebody planted her here," the captain informed him. "She didn't want to talk to me about the Barcland killing." A curtain seemed to come down over Monoco's eyes to shut off all light. His gaze went from the captain to Jim to Dan to Brand and then back to the captain. "You knew Barcland, didn't you, Tony?"

"Yeh," he admitted dryly. "I knew him." His eyes were wary. "But I don't know Miss Marshall and I had no part in planting her here, if she was planted. And I'm getting out of here, if it's O. K. with you."

"It's O. K. with me," the captain agreed.

TOBY EARNS HIS KEEP

By MRS. BELLOC LOWNDES

(Copyright: 1942: By Marie Belloc Lowndes.)

With his right hand he seized his wife's shoulder and rushed across to the open ground.

"IN a way I'm sorry I wasn't here, then," said young Mrs. Coalman hesitatingly, "and I confess I like hearing about all that happened, Mrs. Ashe. But my husband says it's foolish to go back to that terrible time, particularly as it's wrong to spread despondency."

"That may have been true while the bombs were falling, Milly, but it's interesting to look back at some of the queer things that happened," said her visitor defensively.

Mrs. Ashe had a relish for the horrible and Tom Coalman's wife felt a shrinking from this old friend of her dead mother.

The visitor leaned forward on her chair and peered into her hostess' face. The only light in the pleasant sitting room came from a deep blue electric globe, for the master of this house held extremely strict views concerning the blackout, so it was much too dark for Mrs. Ashe's taste. Also she thought it silly to do the blackout too early.

"Just listen to what happened to the Lilleys——" she said eagerly. "I mean the people you met at tea last time you were over at our place. Mr. Lilley took such a fancy to you!"

"I remember him," murmured Mrs. Coalman.

"They were married 40 years ago, much the same time as us, and they were so devoted that folks used to call them 'the turtle doves.' Well, the very last time the siren started, the Lilleys heard it, and off they went to a shelter nearby. Down came a bomb, and some fool called out that it was the only one likely to fall in our district; so Mr. Lilley said he'd go and have a look out. Mrs. Lilley begged and pleaded with him to stay where he was; but, manlike, he thought he knew best. Sure enough, a few minutes later, came a second bomb, a huge one this time, and tho every one in the shelter was saved, Mr. Lilley simply couldn't be found! Mrs. Lilley got more and more frantic. Then, four days later, the poor chap was discovered in an upper room of an empty house, ever so far down the road! The doctors said his dead body must have flown right thru the air, and been catapulted into a blown-out window."

"I've heard something even stranger than that," said Mrs. Coalman slowly. "It must have been that same night, that one of Mr. Coalman's bricklayers, who lives much closer to London than we do, had a soldier son home on leave, who had brought a friend in to supper. They heard the warning and the son and his friend thought they would like to go and look out. His mother tried to stop him, just like Mrs. Lilley did her husband. Then a heavy bomb came down! Nothing happened to the son, but his friend, who had walked on a few yards, just vanished, and not a trace of him has ever been seen."

"It's a blessing the bombing has stopped now," said Milly Coalman, "for if it began again Tom wouldn't let me stay here, and I do so hate being away from him."

"Don't you be feeling too happy——" And then, all at once, Mrs. Ashe heard a whimpering sound close to her feet and she exclaimed in a startled voice, "Whatever's that, Milly?"

"It's only Toby, my little boy's dog. He isn't much to look at, but he's very affectionate, and Boy just worships him." She went on "I've heard that animals always know when a blitz is coming. But I can't believe that——"

"It's true of cats," said the older woman. "And I'll tell you a funny thing, Milly——" and then she stopped abruptly, for she heard Tom Coalman's latchkey turn in the lock of the front door. Tho she had known him all his married life, she did not like him, and never felt at ease with him. There was something about him rough and formidable, as there so often is in a successful self-made man.

The two women heard his deep voice: "Boy not back from school yet, I suppose?" Then he walked into the living room, and his face clouded, for he, on his side, didn't like Mrs. Ashe, and never felt at ease with her.

She got up with: "I must be going home now."

He said promptly: "Maybe you had, for tho there will be a moon soon, the blackout will be pretty dark till then."

His wife smiled at him: "I was just saying how nice it is the bombing of London has stopped."

"It hasn't stopped forever," said Mrs. Ashe in a mournful voice. "Don't you believe anything so silly."

Tom Coalman felt vexed. "They haven't been near us for weeks and weeks. They only go for the munition factories and war objectives, now they know they can't frighten London."

"There was a small raid a few weeks ago," said Mrs. Ashe with a sniff.

"That was a raider who had lost his way."

"That may be true; but they got seven poor souls in one house I know of not far from us."

The speaker had got up, and as she kissed gentle Milly Coalman good-by she told herself Tom Coalman was a regular bear, and no mistake.

Father Complains About Keeping Dog in House

As he turned and opened the door of the room, obviously wishing her gone, she went back again close to his wife, and whispered in a sinister tone, "I wouldn't be surprised if they came tonight. As I was just going to tell you, when your husband came in, our old cat has been running like mad, round and round the kitchen all this afternoon."

Her host saw the visitor out of the house, and as he came back into the room, his foot touched the dog, and Tony again whined.

"That little brute's less than no good!" exclaimed Tom Coalman. "Even in peacetime he wouldn't be worth his keep, and in wartime it's a crime to feed him. What you and Boy give that greedy little mongrel on the sly would keep some poor child in health."

His wife said deprecatingly, "It would break Boy's heart if we got rid of Toby."

"What rot women talk! You've only to send Boy to my sister's for a few days. Then I'll have the dog painlessly destroyed, and the child will have forgotten all about his dear Toby when he's home again."

Milly Coalman plucked up courage. "You're wrong, Tom. Boy told me the other day that he'd far rather have Toby than another brother."

Her husband burst out laughing. That statement of his little son struck him as comical. "He's right enough there! One child is enough in these times."

Toby was slinking toward the door, when Tom suddenly exclaimed, "Why, whatever is that tag fastened to the little brute's collar? It wasn't there this morning."

His wife said nervously, "I got it today, as a surprise for Boy. Some one said yesterday that Our Dumb Friends' league is willing to register any dog brought to one of their offices, so that it can be traced if lost in a raid. Toby's number is on that tag."

"That must have cost you a pretty penny."

"There was no charge at all; and it's really a good idea, for dogs get terrified in raids. They have a lot of animal wardens in London, and when one of them finds a dog wandering about in a raid, he takes it to an animal shelter."

"Well, of all the things I've ever heard, that beats the band! Animal shelters? What a wicked waste of money."

"All the vets have them," she said defensively.

He came up to the fire his wife had lit on this chilly afternoon and in spite of himself, the warmth felt pleasant, for he had had a long and arduous, if very profitable, day. All the same, there was a sharp edge to the voice in which he exclaimed, "You are going it, dearie! Mother never started fires till the first of November." Then, as he saw her face shadow: "Not that I grudge you anything—you know that, sweetheart."

She stood up, and he put an arm around her shoulder. This hard man was almost as fond a husband as he was a father, which was saying a good deal.

He went on: "Still, I hope that Mrs. Brown is more careful with her coals than you are, my pet."

A radiant smile had lit up her sensitive face. They were both remembering what had happened when their little son had come in from his third day at school in the winter of 1940, with an anxious expression on his face. "The boys say I've such a queer name, dad! They thought you brought round the coals; but I said you were something much grander than that, as you build nice houses for people to live in."

"I could buy up the father of any schoolmate of yours a thousand times over," said Boy's dad quickly.

"I 'speck that's true, for one of the boys began to cry today. His name is Jack Brown. They don't have much to eat at home, and he said his mother had no coal, and that they were awful cold. I asked him why she didn't buy some coal, and he didn't say anything then; but afterward, when we'd become chums, he told me his mum had no money to pay for coal. If I was a grownup man like you, dad, I'd give them some. We've got a lot."

And then, even to Boy's surprise, his father said slowly: "Well! I'm not called Coalman for nothing. You find out where young Brown lives and I'll see his mother does get some coal. What's more, I'll send a note with it, saying: 'With a little Coalman's best wishes.'"

Even now, Boy's mother had not got over marveling at her husband's generosity, for he had actually sent a ton of coal to that poor woman! They had been married eight years, and this had been the first time Milly had ever known Tom do anything like that, tho she could not but be aware that they were growing richer every day. Why, even the war was bringing them luck, as he was a builder—and he had told her that after the war he might become a millionaire.

Suddenly they heard the little voice that meant everything to them

NEXT SUNDAY—"NATIONAL SERVICE," A SHORT STORY BY C. S. FORESTER

both. Hard-hearted, close-fisted Tom Coalman loved to hear that voice even more than did his Milly.

Seven year old Boy [quite early his father had decided that so he should be styled, tho he had of course been christened Thomas] burst into the room. "Hello, mum! Hello, dad!" And then: "Where's Toby?"

There came a scratch, scratch on the door.

Dogs have a sixth sense, and Toby generally got out of the way when his owner's father was at home. But now he was in as great a hurry to see Boy as Boy was to see him.

"That's Toby asking to come in ——" and Boy rushed to the door.

"Ay, that's Toby right enough. But I've been telling your mother that as we're at war, it's now what's called a criminal offense to give food that's fit for human consumption to an animal."

Boy was an intelligent child, but these two words "human consumption" were beyond him. He looked puzzled; then rather intimidated, and Mr. Coalman followed up what he saw was his advantage. "I heard yesterday of a little girl's father who was fined 5 pounds after she had given some lumps of sugar to her pony." But his face softened as he added, "I wonder how much I should be fined, and perhaps be even sent to prison, if it was found out that you'd given most of your good dinner last Sunday to that useless dog."

"He isn't useless! I'd go to prison rather than have Toby hungry!"

Boy's mother said quickly, "Don't contradict your father, darling."

"But what dad said isn't true, mum. Toby is a very useful dog."

"I like that," Mr. Coalman said harshly. "He's the only dog I've ever known who didn't earn his keep."

All the same he was sorry he had been so stern, on seeing the troubled look that crossed his son's face. But that look did not move him from his purpose. He had made up his mind to put thru a long distance call from his office tomorrow to his sister, and arrange for Boy to skip school and leave Daisymead for a week. And then, early in that week, useless, tiresome Toby would be painlessly put to sleep for ever.

Tom Coalman and Wife Sit Down to Good Meal

Tom Coalman thought far too much of money, and was the type of man who in time may become a miser. But he had in him a vein of shrewd good sense, and, to some of his business associates' surprise, he was fond of stating it to be his opinion that in wartime people ought to eat more, not less. He followed that principle in his own home, and tho he and his wife still only had one maid, that maid had to be a good cook.

The woman was out tonight, so, after Milly had given Boy his bath, heard his prayers, and put him to bed before the admiring eyes of Boy's father, the two enjoyed a cold roast chicken, with a grand salad which they had grown in their garden, the same as all their neighbors did, now. There was also a sweet of sorts, followed by excellent coffee, and Tom had a glass of wine. Then they settled down happily on each side of the fire.

Mrs. Coalman, who unfortunately for herself had a vivid imagination, could not forget the two strange tragic stories told her by Mrs. Ashe. She and Boy had been in the country, 50 miles from Daisymead, in the pretty garden suburb where they lived, during the whole of the bombing of London, and of what her husband grandly called Greater London. But she had hated being away from her Tom, and he had hated even more being away from his sweet Milly. Sorely, also, he had missed the presence of the child he idolized. It had been a happy day when the two had come home a few weeks ago.

"Then you don't agree with Mrs. Ashe about the bombing of London ever beginning again?" she asked.

"Of course I don't. I always say what I mean. You ought to know that by this time."

But his voice held a caress, and he added, with feeling, "I hope to God that damned croaker is wrong. I should mind it even more than you would, old girl, if you had to go away again. You don't know what it's like, here, with you and Boy away."

Tom Coalman had waited to marry till he was 35, and he had chosen his wife, who was 13 years younger than himself, with care and deliberation, because he had known her to be what he called to himself "an old-fashioned girl," as well as a devoted daughter to a selfish widowed mother. And then, all at once he had fallen passionately in love with her, and, what was stranger still, she had fallen very much in love with him. After eight years they were still lovers, and had he possessed half Milly's imagination, this fortunate man might have felt a quiver of fear at the thought of his persistent good fortune.

All at once there fell on Milly Coalman's ears a far-away kind of ghostly wail. Feeling surprised and startled, she looked at her husband. He had evidently heard nothing. But this immunity only lasted a moment, for there rose on the still air the long-drawn-out insistent warning. It was so loud that it seemed as if the siren was just outside their blackedout window.

They both stood up, and Tom Coalman said firmly, "It's a million to one chance anything will drop near here; nothing ever has." As she remained silent, he went on: "All the same, I'll get Boy downstairs."

Then he saw her mouth was trembling, and he went on, with what was unusual with him, a touch of hesitation, "I suppose we'd best go to our shelter?"

"O, yes—yes!" she cried, for the first time in their joint life making up his mind for him.

And then, in a split second, came the sound of a bomb exploding. But it sounded a long way off.

Toby, who had been lying in front of the fire, sat up on his haunches and emitted a low terrified growl, and Milly remembered he hadn't been like himself all day.

"Be quite, you brute!" shouted Tom Coalman. Then they both rushed to the door, he going first, as was his way, and raced up to their child's room.

Boy was fast asleep, and his father having wrapped him in his fleecy blanket, pressed his son to his broad breast and hurried downstairs.

His wife turned off what lights there were, and in pitch darkness they went along the passage, and so thru their front door. Then, as she half turned 'round to shut it, she heard a sharp "That door must be left wide open; and please push the sandbag against it. I'd do it if I hadn't Boy in my arms."

"But any one will be able to get in, then, Tom, and Toby won't be any good, for he is in the sitting room. Unluckily, I've left my handbag in the kitchen."

"More fool you, my dear."

The moon was full, and it was a beautiful full night. In the bright moonlight they saw that many, tho by no means all, of their neighbors were going toward the large park where stood a public shelter. No one was walking quickly and everything looked so much as usual in their road that Milly Coalman felt assured. She even told herself that they were foolish, maybe, to have left their nice warm house for a damp shelter. But it might annoy her husband if she said so. Believe it or not, tonight was the first time Tom Coalman had ever called his wife a fool.

"I might run back for my bag——"

"You might, but you're not going to——"

What would have been taken for a clap of thunder in the old days, which now seemed so long ago, rent the air, and this time the bomb had fallen much nearer than the first one had done. All the people who had been walking along quietly began running. Tom Coalman shifted his sleeping child onto his left arm, and with his right hand he seized his wife's shoulder and rushed her across to the open ground where stood his substantially built raid shelter.

The stretch of grass, where the prosperous builder had obtained leave to put up a private shelter, was within a few yards of the row of two-storied villas of which his and Milly's was the last. The shelter was too near to that row of villas—so an expert had told him—and especially too near to a high ugly house called Murray Mansion, built in the 80s of the last century, and now regarded as an eyesore by the folk who lived at Daisymead. But the owner wouldn't part with Murray Mansion, for he had made a good living by letting single rooms, and now he had a waiting list, for up to now not a single bomb had fallen on this charming suburb.

Tom Coalman had not had to pay anything for the site of his shelter, and that had influenced him; as also the fact he had not believed it would ever have to be used.

During all the awful raids on London, he had lain, in fair comfort on three cushions, under his heavy mahogany dining table, concentrating the while on the knowledge that, if he were killed, there would be plenty of money to take care of Milly and their son.

The were close now to the big earth mound which covered the Coalman shelter which, as both knew, was envied by many of their neighbors.

"Here, darling, take Boy for a minute——" he exclaimed. Then, unlocking the heavy door, he pushed his wife down the few steps. The shelter was damp and airless, and after he had closed the door, they stood for a moment doing nothing. Only listening. Listening. Listening.

"Wait a minute, and I'll soon have you comfortable——"

Comfortable? Milly shuddered as her husband, striking a match, lit an oil lamp which hung on a nail of the solid wooden wall. She had not been in their shelter since it had been what Tom called furnished, and she now looked about her with painful curiosity.

"He isn't useless! I'd go to prison rather than have Toby hungry."

There were four bunks, one for each of them, and one for the absent maid; and his mother now laid the sleeping child in one of the upper bunks. There were also four upholstered garden chairs, a white-wood table, on which stood a spirit lamp, a teapot, some cups and saucers, and a tea caddy. On the boarded floor lay a square of drugget.

"Everything has been treated so that it can't catch fire, and very nice I call it!" called out Tom Coalman cheerfully.

"Very nice?" She glanced at him, and again she shuddered.

And then came that for which they had been waiting—the clear droning of enemy planes overhead. The planes seemed to be circling around, as if seeking a target, and Tom Coalman knew that they were looking for it. It was a factory many miles from Daisymead. But what are "many miles" to a plane?

Husband's Voice Sounds Hollow and Terrible

He moved across the confined space to the woman he loved. She was standing, rigid, by their child's bunk, listening.

"Now, dearie, don't forget that cars killed the cat," and he believed his hearty voice sounded lightsome and gay. To her it sounded hollow, terrible.

He went on, speaking seriously this time: "They can't stay put, my love. They'll soon be ever so far off!"

And then there happened what, when he had said it, he had honestly believed was a million-to-one chance. There came a curious sound and a crash so blindingly loud that he felt as if his eardrums had gone, followed by the crashes made close to the shelter by a disintegrating roof, the fearsome splitting of strong timbers, and the fall of brick walls, and of heavy masonry.

A long-drawn-out whistle came next, and, as if borne by a mighty wind, Tom Coalman found himself being propelled thru the burst-open door. He was struck, on the way, by a heavy oak beam, and then, dazed and in agony, he found himself lying on the grass, face downward.

Slowly, painfully, he turned around, to see on his left a heap of rubble and earth where his shelter had stood. And, horribly close, in front of him, was the huge mountainous mass which had been, till a few minutes ago, Murray Mansion.

Then came his first thought, that of his wife and son.

More whistles heralding more bombs, and showers of incendiaries, came falling on his left. And soon, between bursts of gunfire, for the night fighters were now up in pursuit of the enemy planes, there came loud cries and pitiful screams from where the houses, of which his was the last, stood, or had stood. But he gave no heed to the fires which had started amid their ruins.

After what seemed to him hours, tho they were only minutes, he heard motor ambulances on their way from the old country town which bore the name of Bratelling.

And then there came, O, bitter irony, the long-drawn-out "All clear." Some one running across the grass stumbled, and nearly fell over him. "Look out!" he cried feebly. Then he heard the surprised voice of a retired schoolmaster named Jenkins, now chief air raid warden, "Why, I declare, it's Mr. Coalman! Are you all right?"

"All right?" God, what a question! Feeling dizzy and faint, he called back, "I'm very far from all right."

The man addressed moved a few steps away. What a surly fellow was this rich builder! He said coldly, "You've been more lucky than many of us, Mr. Coalman, for your house wasn't touched; only one window broken. I saw your dog jump thru it just now. Why, there is the little fellow. He's looking for you. Aren't dogs cute?"

Sure enough, Tom Coalman felt Toby's tongue licking his left hand; it was the first time that had ever happened, for Toby knew quite well that Boy's father begrudged his keep.

And now, Boy's father groaned aloud. "Look here, Jenkins! My wife and little son are buried under that shelter of mine. I was blown out of it."

The warden's voice altered and became kind. "We've got Mrs. Coalman all right, tho one of her feet is badly crushed. But she's not worrying about that. All she's thinking about is you and her boy. If you and she got out, the child surely got out, too."

Tom Coalman's brain began to function, and the power of money became suddenly very present to his mind.

"If you can get some men to come and dig at once, at once, Jenkins, in what remains of my shelter, they'll have a hundred pounds between them, once they've found my boy——" he could not bring himself to finish the sentence with "——dead or alive."

The warden turned on his heel, and running into the roadway, got together four willing helpers. They had been doing grand work, extricating the dead and injured from the bombed houses, with often danger to themselves, and with no thought of reward. Mr. Jenkins was an idealist, and he felt ashamed of mentioning that hundred pounds; but he did mention it, and even he sensed it made a difference.

With an effort which caused him fearful pain, Tom crawled along as near as he could to where his shelter had stood, and in the glare now thrown out by a fercely burning house, he watched while every bit of what remained of the substantial little building was laid, mostly in small pieces, close to him.

At last the man who had acted as foreman to the others came and looked down at him, "There's nothing there, sir," he said feelingly. "Two of the bunks were flung clear, but two were smashed to smithereens."

"My child must be under there. For God's sake, go on looking!"

Another digger came forward, "We've just found this," and he held out the cot blanket in which Boy had been wrapped.

A third man came near, "That your dog over there?"

"Ay, it is."

"Then your little boy must have been in one of the bunks which wasn't smashed. The dog's been sniffling all over it, and it looks to me as if the child must have been flung clear—in the bunk."

Faint and weak as he felt himself to be, Tom staggered to his feet. He and Toby, for once, had a common interest, for the dog was running around now, obviously seeking his little master.

But the dog took no notice of that order. Instead, he rushed toward the great mass of ruins which was all that remained of the stuccoed mansion.

All at once Toby gave a quick sharp series of excited barks, and even to a man who had always been a dog hater, those barks told of mingled joy and fear.

Boy's father dragged himself along painfully, slowly, over the short stretch of grass now covered with bricks, dirt, and dust, and he saw that his son's dog was frantically trying to make a hole in the side of the mountainous heap which had housed some 30 hardworking men and women, each now buried deep under that enormous junkpile.

Dog Leads Father to Where Son Is Buried

Three houses were well afire, so it was as light as day; and suddenly Boy's father saw hanging down, protruding from between two massive pieces of iron, a tiny hand. It was around that tiny hand Toby was desperately attempting, without success, to burrow his way.

Filled with an agony of excitement, surprise, and fear, rather than hope, Boy's father turned around. Yes! The diggers were still standing close to where his shelter had been, no doubt hoping that in spite of their lack of success, hard-fisted Mr. Coalman would "remember them," as the pathetic phrase goes.

"Come over here," he shouted. "His dog has found my child. For God's sake, hurry—hurry!"

And they did hurry. But he didn't feel he could look on while they worked. And he stood, his eyes on the ground, dumbly waiting for what seemed to him an eternity.

Yet it was not more than half an hour later that he felt a touch on his injured arm, and heard the words, "We've got him out at last, Mr. Coalman; and he's alive, poor little chap. Conscious, too, for he knew his dog, and was mighty pleased to see him. He must have been blown thru the air right against the falling house, and his wrist is broken. What saved his life, I reckon, were two props off the iron balcony. They fell in a kind of V shape, and he got wedged between them. But he was blue from want of air to breathe, and you've got that dog to thank for his being found alive. He couldn't have lasted long, and tho they've sent for more diggers, I doubt if they'll be able to start trying to get the people out of there till dawn, and an awful job it will be."

To the astonishment of the good folk of Daisymead, each of the four diggers was "remembered" by Boy's father to the tune of a hundred pounds. As for Toby, he was actually awarded a medal by Our Dumb Friends' league and, what was certainly of greater moment to Boy's dumb friend, Mr. Coalman acknowledged to his Milly that the dog had undoubtedly earned his keep.

SOMEBODY WHISPERED

INSTALMENT VII.

THREE hours later Jim Hallard and Dan O'Malley were still discussing the case in Jim's apartment. They were alone. Nick was out, cruising the near north side, looking for one or two nighthawk hackies who might have driven two mysterious women to or from Miles Barcland's apartment the night he was murdered.

"Somebody just called me . . . they were going to kill me tonight."

Dan bit thru the end of a match and thrust the shortened stick back into his mouth.

"Sometimes," he said, "I figure I don't know anything about people. I get an opinion all set in my mind about somebody. And then they do something that kicks it into the ash can and I got to start all over again. How would you figure young Barcland? You've known him all his life."

"Dick's all right," Jim assured him. "He drinks too much, but it hasn't made him a tramp. This may, tho. He's had a bad shock, maybe two, if he put any hope in his chances of marrying Ann. He has always been in love with her."

"Must have been the shock," Dan said.

"What has he done?"

"Guess it was my fault, telling him where Miss Ann was hiding out," Dan said and peered at him. "I forgot what old John Barleycorn could do to a man. I told him and Mr. Brand that she was out at the Higgins apartment and gave them the address because they happened to walk into my office while you were telephoning me. Just before you came home, a bartender friend of mine telephoned me that young Barcland was drunk in his place and he was telling everybody that I wouldn't let him go out to 723 Garfield boulevard to see her."

Jim didn't listen any further. He picked up the telephone and dialed Ann's number.

"Are you all right?" he asked when she came in the wire.

"No, Jim," she said. "I was going to call you. Somebody just called me. They whispered. They told me they had warned you against continuing to investigate Miles' murder and you had disregarded their warning. So, they said, they were going to kill me tonight."

"Hold tight, Ann," Jim reassured her. "Be sure all your doors are locked and put out the lights. You've got your gun. Don't answer the doorbell until I come. If any one tries to force their way in, shoot thru the door. Dan and I are coming right out there."

They were in a cab at the curb a minute later.

"Seven hundred twenty-three Garfield boulevard," Jim told the driver. "You got your gun, Dan?" he asked as the cab pivoted in the street.

"Yeh," Dan answered calmly. "Why? Did somebody whisper to Miss Marshall?"

"Yes," Jim said grimly. "Somebody whispered."

Ann Marshall laid the telephone quietly back on its cradle as excitement touched her body with cold hands. The ghostly whisper, breathed over the telephone, had startled her, but now, since talking to Jim, she was scared. Jim's reaction and his insistence that she must trust to the revolver he had given her, until he could get there, proved that he believed the Whisperer's sinister message.

Jim's call had followed the Whisperer's almost immediately. She was still in her pajamas in the bed, where she had been asleep when the Whisperer's call a few minutes before had wakened her. Now her first move was to reach under her pillow and pull out the revolver. She wondered whether she had locked both doors before she came to bed. She was sure she had, but the call had made her unsure. She threw back the covers and swung out of the bed and started for the back door with the gun in her hand. Then, realizing that the light beside the bed made an excellent target of her, she came back and turned it out.

The darkness intensified her nervousness. The floor was cold to her bare feet, but she hardly noticed it. Both doors were locked, as she had known all the time in the back of her mind, and she hurried back to the bedroom and put on a robe.

Picking up the gun again, she went into the living room and sat down in the darkness, holding the gun in her lap. The light from a street lamp reached to the sill of the two front windows, but no farther so that she could see thru the windows the occasional people passing along the street. But her eyes were absent. All her consciousness flowed thru her ears. She listened.

A faint sound came to her from somewhere in the back of the building. Some one was climbing the back stairs. She rose and crept slowly thru the dining room to the kitchen. Walking softly to the door, she stood and listened. The intruder was near the top of the stairs. Two more steps and he or she would be against the outside of the door.

Ann waited. She heard the steps taken. Somebody moved against the outside of the door. She could almost see them, straining in the effort to hear any sounds inside, any sounds, Ann realized, she might make. A pencil of light suddenly spilled thru the key hole. The intruder was using a flashlight. Ann saw the door knob turn slowly, giving no sound.

The knob turned slowly back and rested and there was silence on both sides of the door. Ann could hear nothing but the whisper of her own breathing. Then there was a faint scratching sound in the lock. Ann stared at the pencil of light filtering thru the keyhole. The key was moving it. It moved slightly up and down as the scratching grew a little louder. It wavered forward and then shot suddenly from the keyhole, hung an instant on its edge, and fell with a muffled tinkle to the floor.

Ann had never had an experience like this. She knew little about keys or locks, but she had read stories in which burglars had gained entrance into houses by using skeleton keys. So when she heard another scratching in the lock, she stepped back from the door and aimed her revolver at its center just above and beside the lock.

"Get away from that door," she ordered, "or I'll shoot."

Ann Repeats Threat to Shoot Thru Door

The scratching ceased. Again there was silence. The person on the other side of the door was waiting as tense, Ann knew, as she was. Excitement lifted her suddenly to deepen and steady her voice.

"If you don't get away before I count three, I'll shoot," she promised. "One—two——"

. . . .

The taxicab hurtled south on Michigan avenue. It slipped thru the heavy after-theater traffic stream, sliding from one line to the other, scraping fenders, drawing the curses of other drivers. But to Jim Hallard, they seemed to be crawling. He slid aside the glass panel.

"Can't you move any faster?" he demanded.

"Sure, boss," the driver told him, "but I'll get pinched. This is the busy hour."

"We'll take care of you," Dan O'Malley promised. "We're detectives."

"O. K.," the driver said. "It's your party."

The cab picked up speed.

At 24th street they were traveling at 40 miles an hour; at 30th, at 60. At 37th, they heard the wailing siren of the motorcycle and the driver was slowing down as the motorcycle drew abreast and then ahead to the front wheel, forcing the cab into the curb.

"Where's the fire?" the cop went into the ritual as he opened his notebook.

"My fares are detectives," the driver told him virtuously. "They told me to give her the gas."

"O, yeah?" the policeman sneered and opened the door. In the light which went on automatically as the door opened he recognized Dan. "Hello, O'Malley," he greeted him, surprised. "I thought the hackie was kidding me."

"Hello, Murph," Dan smiled.

The policeman's gaze fell on Jim. "You're Mr. Hallard. That right?" he asked, and added. "Is it serious?"

"Yes," Dan answered, "kind of."

"Go ahead," Murphy decided, "I'll be right behind you." He slammed the door.

Jim glanced at Dan. He was smiling. His eyes were half-shut. Jim thought, "The police will certainly arrest Ann. There probably is a general alarm out for her. But that will be better than leaving her until the Whisperer finds her."

"All right, driver," he decided. "Step on it."

The car moved slowly forward, picked up speed. Behind them rose the sputtering staccato of the motorcycle. They resumed their swift journey southward.

. . . .

In the darkness of the kitchen, Ann Marshall raised the gun in her hand steadily and moved it higher than the knob.

"I'm shooting," she said calmly, tho her nerves shook the revolver. Her finger began to squeeze the trigger.

"Who is it?" she demanded.

"Paul Brand," the answer came. "Let me in. Quickly, Ann."

Ann let the revolver dangle at the end of one nerveless hand while she fumbled on the floor with the other in the darkness for the key. She found it, put it in the lock, and turned it to open the door. Paul Brand came in thru the small opening and closed and locked the door behind him. They stood there together in the darkness.

"Are you all right, Ann?" Paul asked. "Has any one tried to molest you?"

"Only you," she smiled, "but I'm glad you've come. Somebody called me on the telephone and threatened to kill me."

"But they didn't, thank God," he said softly in the darkness. "Where's the light?"

Ann lifted the switch on the wall and the kitchen leaped into view. She looked at Paul, never so glad to see any one in her life.

"Thank God I got here in time," he said. "Some one called me at my home and told me they were going to kill you as an example to any one who insisted on investigating Miles' murder. They told me that they would kill me, too, if I didn't drop the investigation and call Jim Hallard off. They spoke in a whisper so I wouldn't recognize their voice, I suppose. I believed them. I remembered that whoever informed the police of Miles' death did so in a whisper. And I'm sure they are insane."

"I think they are, too." Ann agreed, "and I believe they will try to kill me. So does Jim Hallard."

"So Jim knows about the call," Paul nodded.

"Yes, he called just after the Whisperer," Ann smiled uncertainly. "I was afraid that killer would get here any moment. I didn't dare call the police because they were already looking for me. Jim told me to fire thru the door if I heard any one prowling and he'd be here as quickly as he could. I almost did shoot thru the door just now when you didn't answer me. If I did——" She shuddered.

"But you didn't," Paul reassured her. "So don't worry about it. I would have answered if I'd known you had a gun, but I was so relieved to find you safe that I couldn't speak. You should have called me, Ann. It was pure luck that this killer did. When they did, I tried to reason with them, but they wouldn't listen. They said they had warned Jim they would kill you and now you had to die. It was then they threatened me. I hurried here as soon as they broke off the connection."

They both heard footsteps pounding up the back steps. They looked at each other. Ann snapped back the safety catch of her revolver and held it ready. The footsteps ended and a fist pounded on the door. And at that moment the front doorbell pealed.

Pushing the safety on again, she dropped the gun on the table and opened the door. Jim pushed in. He had his revolver in his hand. His face was strained and his eyes were blazing. They fastened on Paul as the front doorbell continued to ring incessantly.

"That's Dan and a policeman, Paul," he said. "Let them in." And as Paul hurried toward the front door, he stared after him and then turned to Ann. "What brought Paul here?" he asked.

"Somebody whispered to him, too," Ann answered. "It must have been when they called me. They told him the same thing. So he hurried here."

"You are all right," he half stated, half asked.

"Yes," Ann assured him, "but I won't stay in this place. Jim, I'm frightened."

What Has Gone Before

Miles Barcland, Chicago financier, who has risen to power and riches thru blackmail, extortion, and bribery, receives a whispered death threat over the telephone. Unable to recognize the voice or the sex of the whisperer, he searches thru records in a secret compartment of his bedroom, hoping to get some clew. He chooses the four most incriminating documents—a death-threatening letter to him by Duke Herndon, bootlegger; a death-threatening letter and two love letters signed "Elfreda"; a record of murders ordered by Tony Monoco, racketeer, and an affidavit swearing that Drake Royal, gambler, killed a certain man. Miles turns over this evidence to Paul Brand, his lifelong friend. That night he attends the opening of a night club run by Monoco, where Lucille Day, Monoco's mistress, is the featured singer. Other guests at the opening include Miles' son, Richard; Brand; Jim Hallard, oil executive and silent partner of Detective Dan O'Malley; Ann Marshall, Hallard's fiancee; Margaret and Herbert Severn, Ann's flirtatious sister and jealous brother-in-law; Duke Herndon, and Drake Royal. Miles is blackmailing Ann into breaking her engagement to Jim and promising to marry Richard by threatening to show Herbert letters Margaret wrote a gigolo. With Miles looking on, Ann gives Jim back his ring. Lights suddenly go out in the night club and some one shoots at Miles but misses. Shortly after 3 o'clock the next morning Jim is awakened by what he thinks is his telephone ringing, but when he answers it the line is clear. He decides to go to Miles' hideout and demand Margaret's letters. When he reaches there he finds Richard drunk in the living room and Miles murdered in the bedroom. As he is picking up a brooch he thinks is Ann's, police step out of hiding and demand it. Some one had called police headquarters shortly after 3 a. m. and whispered the report of Miles' murder. Richard remembers having seen two different women come and go from his father's apartment that night and later having been struck by some one, but he was too drunk to remember the women or his assailant. Miles left a note to Brand asking him to find the murderer. The janitor seems to recognize a picture of Ann but refuses to talk, as he received a whispered threat over the telephone. Brand gets O'Malley to work on the case and turns over the four documents Miles gave him to Jim. Jim telephones Herndon, Royal, and Monoco, telling them that he has the documents, then tapes the documents to the body of Nick, his valet, to keep from getting caught with them. Jim has Nick hide Ann in an apartment to keep her from being questioned by police.

Oona O'Neill Offered Role in New Saroyan Play

Cafe Society Glamor Girl May Accept

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK [Special].—It may turn out that the Eugene O'Neill family will be represented in the new theater season after all. The unpredictable William Saroyan has offered the playwright's daughter, Oona, a job in his new theater. Inasmuch as it is just a little job, a leading part in a new one-act play, Miss O'Neill probably will accept. If she does, that, indeed, will be something.

For one who would like to keep himself and all his kin away from the publicity excitements of the theater, America's first playwright does have a time of it. For seven or eight years now he has been out on the Pacific coast fighting for his health and a chance to finish the greatest cycle of American dramas ever attempted by any dramatist.

During that time he has been periodically hounded by the New York Theater guild and eight or nine other Broadway play producers who are naturally eager to introduce to the playgoing public as many of the plays as he has finished.

When word came that the playwright had taken time out to write an extra number outside his cycle of eight, a drama to be known as "The Iceman Cometh," there was a great scramble for that. O'Neill was properly grateful, but told all inquirers that, until he was able himself to direct the casting and oversee the direction of his play, it would not be available.

No sooner had this statement been reluctantly accepted, than daughter Oona popped into the news. Oona was born in Bermuda to Eugene and the second Mrs. O'Neill, Agnes Boulton, whom he married in 1918. Their mutually agreed upon separation followed 10 years later, Mrs. O'Neill being awarded the custody of the two children, Shane and Oona. [The Irish writer, James Stephens, suggested the names.] After the divorce Eugene married the actress, Carlotta Monterey, and little was heard of the second Mrs. O'Neill and her family until Oona appeared on the scene.

Now it appears, from the more reliable accounts, that Oona has been attending school in New York the last several years and has grown to a very attractive 17 years. She had little thought of a society life and none at all of a career as a café society glamor girl. Suddenly, last winter, she was discovered by a young man interested in a swanky night club contest held each year to elect a debutante to reign as the season's favorite. Brenda Frazier Kelly had held the honor before her, and Gloria Baker Topping, too.

Oona had no social claim to the preference, but she was a pretty brunette, photogenic to a degree, smart, and eager. She had some notion of being an artist, looked with favor on the movies, and thought of the stage as a remote possibility. When the publicity forces of the night club entered her as a candidate for the debutante distinction she was pleased enough to agree that she would accept the honor if drafted.

Drafted she was. A few months later she graduated from the finishing school she was attending, and took her college examinations. Then she began to receive offers of screen tests. Finally came the Saroyan suggestion that she play the lead in his newest play, a little something he had dashed off between breakfast and dinner, which he thought would fit in nicely with his other two items, "Across the Board on Tomorrow Morning" and "Talking to You." It will be interesting to see what happens.

Walt Disney's long heralded "Bambi" caused most of the theater excitement this week. It followed the unforgettable "Mrs. Miniver" at the Radio City Music hall, and I would not be surprised greatly if "Mrs. Miniver" were to follow "Bambi" right back again. Even after an unprecedented 10 week run, during which time a million patrons saw it, there were lines of eager patrons and frequently standees at the music hall last week of the "Miniver" engagement. It probably could have continued, with a change of stage shows, for another 10 weeks to great crowds. There were, however bookings to be taken care of and "Bambi" was the most insistent of these.

The newest, and the "sweetest," Disney musical cartoon also has started off with a hurrah and huge crowds. It is, as the picture critics have allowed, an entirely charming exhibition. It is magnificent in its scenic values, striking in its technicolor beauty, and worked out with the amazing skill of the Disney artists and animators.

But, past these perfections, and a feeling of satisfaction in having spent so pleasant an hour with so pleasing a fantasy, there is no great emotional grip to "Bambi." To compare its appeal to that of "Mrs. Miniver" is like comparing "Alice in Wonderland" to "Gone with the Wind." Each is perfect in its way, but not for all publics, which is why I say I would not be surprised if all the booking laws extant were put aside to make it possible for the "Miniver" classic to be returned to the music hall and denied the New York suburbs for another month or two.

In "Bambi" the Disney artists have surpassed themselves in holding, as it were, their animations up to nature. There is frequent exaggerations, usually in the interests of that cartoon comedy for which the studios are famous. But mostly it is hard to discover, during the progress of the picture, where photographic reproductions, if any, leave off and the Disney artists take over in backgrounds as well as in the figure drawing.

Whether or not this is a wise Disney trend from a box office point of view I couldn't venture an opinion. As far as I am concerned, the farther the cartoon fantasies get from those extreme distortions that are supposed to be funny in themselves, rather than in what they reasonably suggest, the happier I will be. I appreciate the grotesque more as a spur to imagination than as an exhibit of sheer ugliness.

But there are those who like their Donald Ducks raw. They will find "Bambi" to much on the pretty side, and probably a little too softly sentimental, altho herein grownups and adolescents will find the picture's surest appeal. Younger children will love it all, getting much more from it, I believe, than they got from "Fantasia" and "Pinocchio," even more than they loved "Snow White," or "Dumbo." There are no scary witches in "Bambi." As a children's classic of the screen, it should outlast all the Disney output.

I see by the papers that Staff Serg. Ezra Stone has been called in from the radio and "The Aldrich Family" for the duration. That will mean a serious disappointment to thousands of Aldrich fans for a little while or until Ezra's professional understudy succeeds in taking over as Henry's little brother or, perhaps, his cousin, but it had to be.

If the army heads had permitted Stone to continue his radio work there would have been demands from all the other actors in the services for a chance to double their jobs. This isn't a war that can be fought and won with privileges. The fact that Ezra had consistently given his $1,200 a week radio salary to the relief funds proves that he realized as much. He is a fine little actor and a sturdy patriot. There'll be a big crowd at the depot when Henry comes home.

Screen Rights to New Philip Barry Play Sold

Remembering the immense success of Philip Barry's "The Philadelphia Story," M-G-M has willingly paid $260,000 for the screen rights to the author's newest play, "Without Love." Presumably the movie cannot be released until after Katherine Hepburn's New York stage engagement in the play, beginning this fall, and her subsequent tour.

Lem Ward to Direct "Eve of St. Mark"

One of the most distinctive directors of the Broadway stage is Lem Ward, who has been chosen by the Playwrights company and the Theater Guild to direct Maxwell Anderson's new "The Eve of St. Mark."

When Mr. Ward takes over the direction of a play he likes to do it his way. Over the years he has worked out a system, which he says saves time and money for the producer. He worked it on "Brooklyn, U. S. A." and on "Uncle Harry," the current New York success with Eva LeGallienne and Joseph Schildkraut. Altho rehearsals for the latter started a day late, the curtain went up on time—or, to be exact, just five minutes late.

• • •

Here's how it works: After he accepts direction of a script he moves right in with his "production staff." Howard Bay goes along to do the scenery; Moe Hack steps in with his wires and screw drivers to set up the lighting; Toni Ward [Mrs. Lem] takes on the costuming [tho Peggy Clark designed the "Uncle Harry" costumes]; Milton Baron becomes business manager; James D. Proctor beats drums for the press, and Ben Ross takes over the stage managership.

Mr. Ward finds that things coordinate much better when he is working with his own gang. He then figures out the time from start of rehearsals to opening date, lays out the entire schedule on a master sheet, mounts it on cardboard, and all concerned eye it constantly.

• • •

Because the Playwrights company has its own staff, the typical Ward system will be employed only in part in the forthcoming production of "The Eve of St. Mark." The play will be done without scenery, tho various properties will be used on the stage. Mr. Bay will be responsible for designing these. There will be 22 actors in the cast. The play is in two acts, of seven and five scenes, respectively.

Also on Mr. Ward's directorial schedule is Jerome Weidman's play, "All These Years," in which Sir Cedric Hardwicke will return to the stage for his first assignment since "Shadow and Substance." Another play, not yet completed, in which Mr. Ward is interested is Thomas Job's dramatization of Mary Ellen Chase's novel, "Dawn in Lyonesse."

Cole Porter Writes Score for New Musical Show

Cole Porter has been at work on the score and lyrics of a new musical show, to be staged in the fall by Vinton Freedley, producer of Mr. Porter's current hit, "Let's Face It." Originally titled "Jenny Get Your Gun," the show has been renamed "Something for the Boys." Herbert and Dorothy Fields are the authors of the book.

Spivak's Band, Trumpet, Liven Panther Room

By Will Davidson.

To take a trick, trumpet—especially in the Panther room.

Harry James did it. And now Charlie Spivak is doing it. Charlie had an unhappy debut in Chicago cafés some time ago when a mass production nitery, like the trumpet blasted walls of Jericho, fell down but didn't go boom, but he is getting his deserved kudos now in the Hotel Sherman's temple of tempos. Fronting a loud, well disciplined, and very emphatic band, Charlie already is the idol of the kids, and probably has assured himself a steady spot in the Sherman's parade of swing.

Charlie's trumpeting is sweet, by comparison to the klaxoning of so many swing gabriels. And his band's music is unusually sweet, too, for a solid swing crew. Dave Tough gives it a beautiful beat at his drums, and Garry Stevens and the Stardusters, a three-boys-one-girl quartet, lend it a pleasant vocal touch in such numbers as "Brother Bill," "I Surrender, Dear," "Nightingale," and "He Wears a Pair of Silver Wings." The latter is June Hutton's specialty. Buddy Yeager goes reefer man in a delightfully doped vocalization of "Let's Keep Smilin!"

Nina and Quico Barbosa, a handsome and talented singing pair, are the bright spot of the Mexican cantina number, which is otherwise strictly south of the boredom.

Enlistments along the fun front continue strong. Harriet O'Rourke, the Chicago coloratura soprano who won the women's competition in The Tribune Music Festival this year, has just opened an indefinite engagement at the Eitel restaurant. . . . Betty Riley, a superb singing entertainer, will open in the Pan-American café of the Hotel La Salle this week, co-starring with José Manzanares, the greeter-maestro. . . . George Tapps and Eddie Oliver's orchestra are now in the Mayfair room of the Blackstone hotel. . . . Billie Holliday is one of the galaxy that is performing in the Garrick Stage bar. Others are Red Allen and J. C. Higginbotham, swing greats, Gladys Palmer, the Cats and the Fiddles, Sharps and Flats, Sinclair Mills, and Art Van Damme.

Boswelling the Bistros:

Very happy news about Dick Barstow, who for some time has given of his ample dancing genius to Merriel Abbott's line numbers in the Palmer House. Dick is now dance director for the Shubert show, "Helzapoppin," which comes to the Erlanger late next month. With his very real talent as a director, he should go far in the theater. . . . Tommy Tucker can play in almost any key, including Phi Beta Kappa, which he won at the University of North Dakota. . . . The Seneca hotel has acquired the Stevens hotel's famous chef, John Muntean, much to Manager John Schlotterbeck's delight.

Forty per cent of the original staff at Don the Beachcomber is in the army. . . . Delightful shivers: the way Buster Bailey holds that piercing note thru nearly two minutes of "St. Louis Blues," as played by John Kirby, and Kirby's arrangement of "Birth of the Blues." . . . Dean Murphy writes that he's appearing at Saratoga Springs, along with Joan Merrill. Joe E. Lewis is a rival.

Griff Williams will introduce a new girl singer when he opens at the Palmer House Sept. 17. She is Freddie Terry, a lively beauty from Texas, I believe. Griff has had one girl singer, to my knowledge: Lois Lee. Griff's on vacation now in the Pacific northwest. . . . Best commentary on Chicago's reaction to the black-out came from Lloyd Wendt, quondam pinch hitter for me, who is about to become the father of a book on Bathhouse John Coughlin. Quoth Lloyd: "Everybody was delighted."

Prokofieff Gives Soviet Music Report

In recent dispatch from Russia, Sergei Prokofieff has this to say about present musical activities in the Soviet union.

"In process of creation in this vast country's many cities is 'Music of Great Battles,' which should and will reach the incomparably high level demanded by our epoch.

"I want to tell something about a group of composers thrown together by destiny in the rear—North Caucasus and Transcaucasia. They included that prominent master of musical composition, Miaskowsky, Feinberg, Anatol Alexandroff, Crane, Nechayeff, Goldenweiser and the writer of these lines. When we arrived in Nalchik in the center of Kabardinobalkaria autonomous region the musical profession came into contact with original song creators in the persons of local people. The wealth of regional folklore which formerly had not attracted attention now proved an inexhaustible source of inspiration for composers of widely differing styles and schools of musical writing. The credit for the "discovery" of this source is partly due to Miaskowsky.

• • •

"Before, pedagogical work had taken up the whole of his time—the majority of Soviet composers are his pupils—but now he devoted himself with all the passion of a great artist to composition. The symphony he has written around Kabardinobalkarian folklore motifs is among the most important contemporary musical compositions. Besides that he has written in a comparatively short space of time two string quartets and a sonatina.

"Folklore themes formed the basis of Feinberg's ballades for piano and of various works by Crane, Nechayeff and Goldenweiser. My own tribute to Karbardinobalkarian themes is a string quartet: I found this classic musical form extremely attractive in conjunction with folklore.

• • •

"A salient feature of the creative work of this group is the writing of fundamental compositions — in particular, several operas. Anatol Alexandroff has just finished a piece woven around Caucasian themes after Lermontoff's "Bela." Shaporin has been kept extremely busy, too, with his work as instructor of the Transcaucasian Military District Musical Ensemble.

"The center of my attention since the war has been the composition of an opera based on Leo Tolstoy's "War and Peace." The translation of this vast canvas into musical language has occupied my thought for many years. That the realization of my conception should fall during the period when the heroes of our first patriotic war acquire additional glory in the light of contemporary events is not merely fortuitous. I have not deviated from the epic canvas painted by Tolstoy's genius, but I have been influenced by parallels between historic facts and contemporary facts.

"Simultaneously I am completing a symphonic suite, 'Year 1941.' At the moment I am preparing to depart for Alma Ata, where I shall write music for 'Ivan the Terrible,' a film upon which Eisenstein is now working.

• • •

"I have told American readers something about a small group of composers, but this applies to the entire Soviet musical family. Inspired by the same feeling that moves all patriots, our composers are working with ten times their usual energy to contribute their share in the cause of the enemy's defeat. For centuries to come heroes of the patriotic war will claim universal attention: the greatest happiness for each of us is to embody these types in his own particular medium to convey the grandeur of our epoch in the language of music which is the most expressive and comprehensible to the whole world."

POPULAR RECORDINGS

Too much can't be said for Freddy Martin's Victor recording of that gorgeous ballad, "Abraham." It is delightful Negro stuff in an invigorating dance tempo. The Abraham, incidentally, is Lincoln. The other side is a good number, too, "White Christmas."

Glenn Miller, Marion Hutton, and the other special performers have done quite a job with that "Conchita, etc., etc., Lopez" number. Much push, histrionics, and ad libbing make this amusing. The other side, "Long Tall Mama" is grand in the "Tuxedo Junction" manner. There's a new ballad that you'll probably be hearing a lot soon, "I Came Here to Talk for Joe." Sammy Kaye has done a suave job of waxing it. The other side is a new "Wagon Wheels," called "Where the Mountains Meet the Sky." Billy Williams sings it well, and this looks like another hit.

Give Vaughn Monroe a really stirring song and that baritone of his sweeps to new triumphs. "When the Lights Go On Again" is such a song, and Vaughn gives it a thrilling interpretation, vocally and instrumentally. The backer upper is a peppery bounce bit, "Hip Hip Hooray." Leave it to Earl Hines to do what he has done with a tremendous new blues song, "Stormy Monday Blues." Billy Eckstein bores in with a spine tingling vocal. A good, easy shuffle tune backs it up, "Second Balcony Jump."

La conga gets a break from Vincent Lopez in two new sides, "Cachita" and "Los Hijos de Buda." There are congas and congas, but these are timed and styled for both dancing and listening, which is quite a feat.

Band Aids the Morale of Men at Great Lakes

The most extraordinarily simple and revolutionary practice in the employment of musicians in wartime is to be found in the operation of the band here at the United States Naval Training station. Experienced and renowned professional musicians have been enlisted as navy musicians. In other wars this has not been the case, and its full adaptation at Great Lakes has resulted in the high morale of many thousands of sailors in training, and has also provided an excellent instrument for maintaining home morale on a national scale via the radio. It has afforded expert music necessary to the military drills and reviews, and has created a high esprit de corps among the 100 men attached to the band, music and entertainment department.

Much of the credit for the planning, operation, and success of the department belongs to Lieut. Comm. Edwin E. Peabody, U. S. N. R., who has piloted all of the musical activity at Great Lakes for the past year.

Due to Lieut. Comm. Peabody's energetic organizational ability there is a great deal of music at Great Lakes, and all of it comes under his supervision. A new theater is being built in which most of his staff will rehearse and perform. There is hardly any one among his men who does not function in several capacities at once: arranger and band player, conductor and arranger, violinist and tuba player, etc. Besides, every man is a sailor with a sailor's training, duties, and responsibilities.

Nearly all of the 100 men are instrumentalists. Altogether they compose the large band which accompanies the most important naval functions. Several other bands are formed out of the aggregate. A so-called "A" band consists of 25 first rate jazz players. This group appears on the "Meet Your Navy" broadcast over the Blue Network, Inc., each Friday evening. It also takes part in the "Happy Hours" [to be described later] and occasionally plays for dances. The "B" and "C" bands consist of 20 players each, forming "hot" units for dances and Happy Hours. There is also a similarly functioning rhumba band.

• • •

The music for these bands—all from the current popular répertoire—is especially arranged by the staff of seven arrangers who now wear the bluejacket uniforms and have graduated to the navy from leading "name" bands. These men play instruments in at least one performing group in addition to arranging music. They generally rehearse their own creations. Following the first rehearsal the musicians, especially in "A" band, continue to play under the direction of Lieut. Comm. Peabody or Bandmaster Frank R. Mettlach, U. S. N., both of whom conduct the broadcasts and Happy Hours. Bandmaster Mettlach, who has charge of personnel, also conducts the aggregate band.

A concert band of 45 players—a cross section from every group—performs a weekly program each Tuesday for patients in the naval hospital and repeats the concert the next day for Rear Adm. John Downs, commandant of the 9th naval district and commanding officer of the training station, and other high station officials. These programs are conducted by Bandmasters Mettlach, Sidney Zeramby or myself.

• • •

The Happy Hour is a monthly entertainment, traditional in the navy. Its customary date ashore and afloat is the third Thursday in each month. The Happy Hour is attended by an audience of 3,500 recruits, for whose enjoyment the program is designed. The framework of the program consists of a band number, a community sing led by Lieut. Comm. Peabody, and two popular numbers played by the "A" band as an opening; then a group of banjo solos played by the commander [known in civilian life as Eddie Peabody, the banjo king], followed by more "A" band selections, and finally community singing for the closing.

Sandwiched in this framework there is a variety program presented by carefully chosen recruit talent [singers, dancers, instrumentalists, monologists].

Guest bands seldom fail to thrill or be thrilled, but the recruit talent is most stimulating. The navy is composed of men from every station in civilian life. It follows that talents are varied and that abilities and personalities cover a wide range. Sometimes a professional mime or a nonprofessional farmer boy crooner from Wisconsin brings down the house. Sometimes stage fright overtakes a novice hoofer or violinist, but on these occasions with true shipmate spirit their own companies rise up with cheering, and embarrassment created by the faux pas is quickly erased.

Singing has its place at Great Lakes, too. There exists among the instrumentalists a group of 25 men known as the Singing Bandsmen. Musician Second Class William Fischer, who has had civilian experience in jazz vocal ensembles, leads and arranges for the group, which appears on nearly all broadcasts.

Under Chaplain Hjalmar F. Hanson's direction there is a choir of 200 voices. Fifty members of this choir are able to retain membership for about five weeks before being sent off to sea duty. The remaining 150 enter and leave much more frequently. The choir sings at church services, on broadcasts, and at Happy Hours.

Lieut. Comm. Peabody encourages every one to do original work, to arrange music, compose, think up "production" ideas for the theater, create appropriate new lyrics for old songs, radio script ideas, etc.

Vaudeville

Oriental theater. Duke Ellington, Harlem's eminent "aristocrat of jazz," has moved his band from the Panther room to the Oriental stage this week. His orchestral offerings will, of course, furnish the basis of the program, but an all-colored revue will share honors with the Duke and his players. Among the featured performers in the revue are Jig Saw Jackson, Baby Lawrence, Dusty Fletcher, Betty Roche, Joya Sherrill, Phyllis Smilly, and Pops and Louis.

Chicago theater. The week's headliners are Alveno Rey and his orchestra, and the four King sisters—Luise, Alyce, Donna, and Yvonne.

Rialto theater. Margie Hart, who has just had a fling at the movies, returns in the flesh this week to reveal her wiles in the art of stripping. Margie has become one of the top names in burlesque, along with Ann Corio and Gypsy Rose Lee. Last year her name was immortalized in a fragrant lyric in the musical comedy, "Pal Joey." She has also frequently posed for magazine covers. In addition to Miss Hart, the Rialto bill offers the usual variety of diversions.

Margie Hart.

Helsing's Vodvil Lounge. The Three Make Believes continue as headliners. Their colleagues in the current bill are Mel Ody, juggler; Lillian Clark, soprano; Chet Robie, pianist, and the Four New Yorkers, vocal quartet.

Larry Adler Appears with San Francisco Orchestra

Larry Adler, the harmonica virtuoso, recently appeared as soloist with the San Francisco Symphony orchestra, under the baton of Pierre Monteux. He played his own transcription of the Vivaldi-Nachez violin concerto, written for him by Jean Berger, and Ravel's "Bolero."

Community Play Yard Gives Rise to Problems

Influence of Other Children Must Be Met

By Gladys Huntington Bevans.

[Copyright: 1942: By News Syndicate Co., Inc.]

Each of us who has children thinks if [with a magic "if"], we were only placed thus or so with our children how perfect life would be. Many city dwelling mothers think that living in the suburbs or country would solve all their problems of school and outings, yet I've known parents to make such changes only to find that they were merely switching problems, that the schools were not good, there were no sidewalks on the highways between houses, that the neighbors' children were simply turned loose.

• • •

The following letter is not the first to come to me about those troubles so difficult of solution, when a garden playspace is provided for cottage or apartment community living:

"My dear Mrs. Bevans:

"My little boy is 3½, shares his toys and possessions nicely with other children, and has a good disposition. He has been taught not to throw dirt or any article at any one, and must not hurt any child by hitting.

"I tried to make him understand that he could accomplish more by walking off and ignoring any assaults on him, or to give that child a toy to play with. This has only resulted in some very bad wounds and bumps wherever the blows land.

"I have been observing the children at play quite closely and believe their mothers are at fault. We live in a small country-home-apartment with a community playyard. There are but six children who use our yard, and all have a proper right to be there and you couldn't keep any child out of it until he learns to behave reasonably well.

"I am just at my wits' end to combat the words and actions my small son is bringing home with him. Most times I try ignoring, but lately I've been spanking and that is so unsatisfactory. I have tried other methods of punishment without success. The outside children's influence is so strong."

• • •

From personal experience I know that there are many mothers who turn their children loose, without supervision, to the annoyance and sorrow of other mothers who are really trying to guide their children.

Of course a snap answer might be, "Teach your child to defend himself, to fight back." But that is not a real answer to this problem. And if one's child didn't happen to be as strong physically as the habitual aggressors, well, he'd be out of luck.

• • •

To this mother I wrote, in part:

I do not know of anything very definite or helpful that I can say to help you, except that you might start a little informal mothers' meeting, perhaps at your own apartment where you could serve tea, and talk over child training in general, and so eventually the problems of the children. In this way the mothers might become aware of the lack in their own small sons and daughters, and an intelligent interest be aroused. Perhaps your group could read together, books or articles on the subject. Our department has booklets and leaflets that are used in that way by many groups of parents, both informal groups and large organizations.

Then, in order to stimulate wider interests in the children and develop some "togetherness," the mothers might take the children on little trips or picnics, two mothers at a time, leaving the others free. For, since you have to put up with this play space, you really should "go into action," and try to change conditions.

Is the intelligence test a permanent guide to a child's mental limits? How can the teacher hold the interest of children in studies? Answers are given in "Talks With Teachers," new 28 page booklet by Gladys Huntington Bevans. Get your copy today at the Tribune Public Service offices, 1 South Dearborn street, and Tribune Tower. The Lady of The House

Along the Little Roads.

The little roads of August, fringed with red and purple and blue and gold, shaded by maple and oak and elm, wind thru rich fields where nod the heavy harvests our own good earth has brought us once again; while otherwhere—

There's silence in the harvest field;
And blackness in the mountain glen,
And cloud that will not pass away
From the hilltops for many a day;
And stillness round the homes of men.

We follow the little road between burgeoning hedgerows of purple elderberry, wild grape, and bittersweet, highlighted by great clumps of jewel weed and goldenrod, out into the open between veritable thickets of heavenly blue chicory, and gaze upon the huge plaid of green and gold and brown fields, like all the tartans of all the clans, sheltering under its warm folds the good mother who gave birth to it all.

Where the reeds and the rushes grow tall and rank we pause on the weedy, winding bank of a slough, drawn by the bright red shields of two parent coots feeding their chicks, which every few moments go adventuring to the next clump of rushes and then come skittering back over the glassy pool to parental protection as effortlessly as tho propelled by some magic force.

Over yonder the redwings dip and sway on the reeds like bright flowers doing a stately minuet. At our feet pink and purple clovers nod in time and tune. And now a fresh little wind tears the misty veil and blows away the shreds as twilight comes. The coots disappear into deeper shadows and the little black tern, who all this while has been preening himself on a nearby post in utter disregard of two curious humans, plucks another little gray feather from under his wing and it floats softly down like the deepening dusk . . . darkness with no lurking terrors . . . evening star shining out serenely . . . and in the lofty highroads of the skies strange silver birds wing their swift way hither and yon.

Moon Flowers.

Fair ladies at the garden wall
Like cameos on green;
Their perfume is enchanting,
Their manner is serene.
With gowns of ivory satin
And faces sweet and bright,

Wild Columbine.

Wild Columbine was sent to Charles I. by a young Virginia colonist to adorn the gardens of Hampton court. In America humming birds are the chief fertilizing agent of the columbine and other deep throated flowers, but in Europe this task is performed by bees, so there the flower attires itself in blue in place of the familiar red dress of the American columbine.

Parsley Relish.

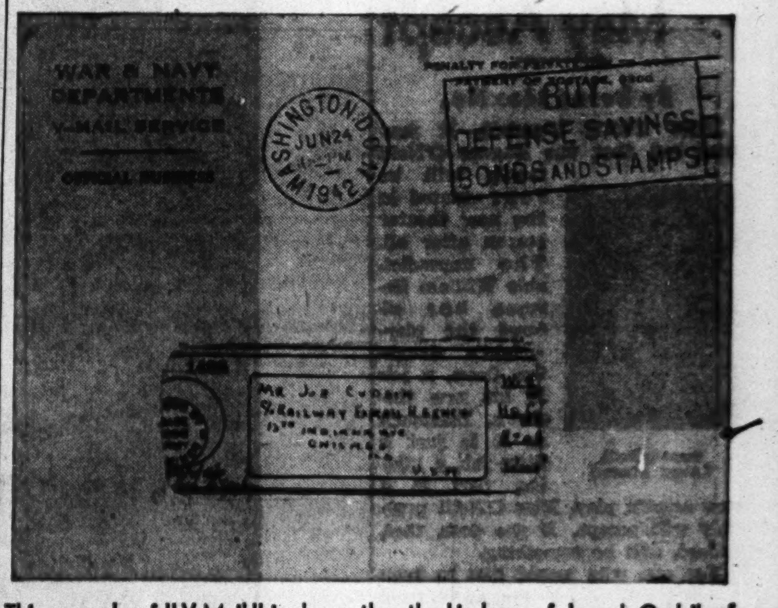
The Stamp Collector

By Richard McP. Cabeen

Mr. Cabeen will answer questions about stamps, except concerning values. Do not ask where stamps may be sold, as the Stamps and Coins advertising section adjoining contains offers to buy and sell. Inclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope for reply.



This example of "V-Mail" is shown thru the kindness of Joseph Cudzik of Chicago. The letter originated in London, was filmed there and reproduced in America, and forwarded to the addressee in the penalty window envelope.

Collectors are little concerned with mail robberies unless it happens that some of the stolen mail is recovered and bears an official sticker or rubber stamped notation to explain the delay or the reason for the absence of letters or enclosures.

A hundred years ago highway robbery was one of the risks of the service, but this largely vanished when railroads and steamboats became the principal carriers. At that time the stage coach driver delivered a sack of mail at a postoffice where it was opened and the postmaster removed whatever was addressed to his office and after adding outgoing mail relocked the pouch and returned it to the driver. This system was responsible for a great deal of petty pilfering en route and it was difficult to pin the responsibility on any one.

Following 10 years' service as a special agent of the postoffice department, J. Holbrook, who seems to have been the progenitor of all special agents and postoffice inspectors, set down his experiences in a book entitled "Ten Years Among the Mail Bags."

This volume, written in 1855, at one time could be found in nearly every stamp collector's library. It contains considerable information on early methods of carrying mail, especially on railroads, before the introduction of the modern railway postal service, but that would hardly account for its inclusion in so many libraries. It is this writer's opinion that it found its place more from the fact that it was practically the only book dealing in any way with the United States postal service.

A local collector has a letter of May 20, 1852, which Mr. Holbrook wrote to a route agent on the Boston and Albany railroad suggesting that it might be a nice gesture for the route agents and the Albany clerks to give him a watch chain since he had solved a case which had cast suspicion on all those postal employés. As he puts it: "Now the special agents of the department are soon to present me with a watch for my services in getting a law thru congress increasing their pay, and it would be a very pretty idea to have a chain to go with it from the route agents on the Boston and Albany road, and the clerks in the Albany office. It is not the value of the thing in dollars and cents that I should consider, but the compliment involved, and I should in the future take great satisfaction in knowing that the respect and confidence of you and your associates had been exhibited in a form that I avail myself of hereafter in showing my standing with those with whom I have had to do officially."

Mr. Holbrook than suggests a form of presentation to accompany the chain, and asks his correspondent to keep the matter in strictest confidence and should it not meet with his approval, to forget the entire matter. And above all he asks that this letter be destroyed. Since the letter was not destroyed there is a suspicion that the route agent addressed did not fall in with the idea and may have preserved the letter for some future use.

Some time ago a ruling was made by the government that War Savings stamps were not to be considered philatelic items. Altho this was a good idea, for the stamps belong in a numismatic collection along with the other negotiable obligations of the government rather than in a stamp collection, there was no reason for a ruling which excluded the stamps from the catalog. United States collectors, as a rule, collect whatever is included in the standard catalog, especially if spaces are provided in the albums.

A recent reversal of the ruling will result in the sale of sets of the stamps to a great army of collectors, and many of these sets will never be offered for redemption. Information now comes that the stamps will be listed in the Standard and in the United States Stamp Catalogs of Scott Publication Inc., and that company has provided three album pages to accommodate singles, blocks and booklet panes of the five values of War Savings stamps. The stamps will be listed at face value only. The album pages are standard for the hinged post Scott albums and are available at cost, at 15 cents per set, or 25 sets for $1.50, both postpaid.

The Original Order of Zunks will sponsor a cachet for Labor day canceled at Liberty, N. Y. Send all covers, standard size, stamped at first class rates and addressed and sealed with 1 cent for forwarding each cover to G. H. Hamilton, 54 Hooper street, [19] Pittsburgh, Pa., before Aug. 26.

The Cleveland Cover club, will sponsor a Labor day cover to be mailed from War, W. Va. Send covers, ready to go, with " cent additional for forwarding, to G. H. Hamilton, 54 Hooper street [19], Pittsburgh, Pa., before Aug. 26.

The Revenue Philatelic agency, 002 Internal Revenue building, Washington, D. C., has available for public distribution, a list of revenue stamps which can be purchased thru that office. This list includes Documentary and Silver Tax stamps, Motor Vehicle, Boat and Firearms stamps, etc. Denominations in this agency run up to $1,000, so there is something to fit every pocketbook.

Some of the local collectors do not believe that the personal property tax as announced for stamp collections in the District of Columbia will have a harmful effect on philately. As an example of what may be expected let us mention that it may result in a marked decrease in sales at the Philatelic agency, that is in local sales to district residents. Much of the material sold at the agency during the last ten years is worth just exactly what the collectors paid for it. Had there been a tax of $1.75 per year imposed on the holdings since 1932 each $100 purchase of stamps would represent an investment of $117.50, and it still would be worth face value. While the collector of older issues or of used stamps may appraise the "true" value of his stamps quite low, it is difficult to see how the collector of recent unused issues can declare them to be worth less than face value.

An oddity in war cover cancellations is that from the Japanese concentration center at Manzanar, Cal., according to Cover News. The first postmark used at the center was the regular Los Angeles, Cal., Station M, mark from which the abbreviation Sta. had been removed leaving the letter "M" off center at the bottom of the mark. Altho 235 miles from Los Angeles, the center is a branch of that office and is said to be the most remote branch of any postoffice within the United States. Recently a new hand stamp has been provided which reads Manzanar, Cal., but it remains a branch of Los Angeles. This cancellation will not be easy to obtain unless the collector can figure out a good reason for writing to the center.

A. A. Christenson, 2855 Jackson street, Alameda, Cal., will sponsor a cachet paying tribute to the aircraft carrier Lexington. Covers will be mailed from five towns bearing the name Lexington. Those desiring the full set should send five covers. Use standard size envelopes, stamped, addressed, but unsealed, and inclose 1 cent per cover for forwarding. Deadline Sept. 1.

[Have you some household help that lightens labor, saves on equipment? Is there some comfort you could enjoy? We'll be glad to pass on your ideas to our readers. Address Louise Bargelt, The Chicago Tribune.]

Mrs. Gladys B., Holland, Mich.—I've learned that if I get rid of stain and scorch from my cooking dishes as soon as possible after they've appeared it saves me hard rubbing and saves on the wear and tear of the utensils.

Miss Letty S., Chicago—I make my small rugs on my waxed hardwood floors "nonskid" by the following method: I baste table oilcloth on the back of the rug with the glossy side next to the floor. Of course I cut this oilcloth "to fit."

Mrs. Grace F., Oak Park, Ill.—If you find that handlebar grips on a bicycle are always coming off try this method to keep them on [my husband says it works]: Around ends of handlebars he wraps friction tape. After that he dips the grips in turpentine and this lets them slip over tape. Then the grips shrink to original size after turpentine evaporates.

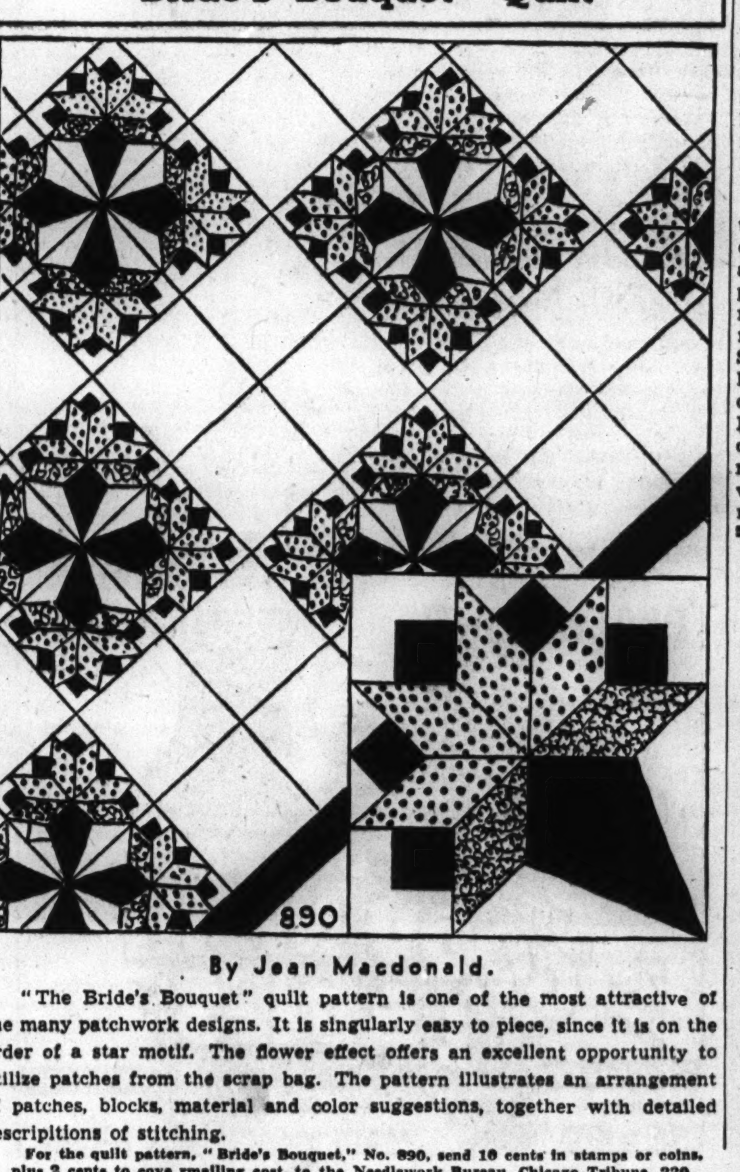
"Bride's Bouquet" Quilt



By Jean Macdonald.

"The Bride's Bouquet" quilt pattern is one of the most attractive of the many patchwork designs. It is singularly easy to piece, since it is on the order of a star motif. The flower effect offers an excellent opportunity to utilize patches from the scrap bag. The pattern illustrates an arrangement of patches, blocks, material and color suggestions, together with detailed descripitions of stitching.

For the quilt pattern, "Bride's Bouquet," No. 890, send 10 cents in stamps or coins, plus 2 cents to cover mailing cost, to the Needlework Bureau, Chicago Tribune, 220 Fifth avenue, New York City.

[ADVERTISMENT]

Pull the Trigger on Constipation, with Ease for Stomach, too

When constipation brings on discomfort after meals, stomach upset, bloating, dizzy spells, gas, coated tongue, and bad breath, your stomach is probably "crying the blues" because your bowels don't move. It calls for Laxative-Senna to pull the trigger on those lazy bowels, combined with Syrup Pepsin for perfect ease to your stomach in taking. For years, many Doctors have given pepsin preparations in their prescriptions to make medicine more agreeable to a touchy stomach. So be sure your laxative contains Syrup Pepsin. Insist on Dr. Caldwell's Laxative Senna combined with Syrup Pepsin. See how wonderfully the Laxative Senna wakes up lazy nerves and muscles in your intestines to bring welcome relief from constipation. And the good old Syrup Pepsin makes this laxative so comfortable and easy on your stomach. Even finicky children love the taste of this pleasant family laxative. Take Dr. Caldwell's Laxative Senna combined with Syrup Pepsin, as directed on label or as your doctor advises, and feel world's better. Get genuine Dr. Caldwell's.

Good Nutrition Is Homemaker's Duty in Wartime

Fashions

By Angela

If a coat is among your fall and winter wardrobe needs, now is a good time to shop for it.

Red wool, and the quilted pattern on the pockets to resemble cartridge plaiting, make the first coat reminiscent of the noble Russians. A small tailored collar of black Persian hugs the throat. Under $60.

Casual comfort is the byword of the tuxedo coat. The teal blue fabric is 100 per cent virgin wool. Black skunk borders the tuxedo front, and continues around the neckline to form the collar.

The fitted coat sketched third is a sage green nubby wool [100 per cent virgin wool] dramatized with a large, fluffy, shawl collar of rich red fox. The coat is belted only in the front, leaving the fitted smoothness of the back unbroken. Under $80.

Lynx dyed wolf softens the tailored swagger of the brown herringbone. The collar is full and generous, rounding into a wide curve across the back.

Rich and dressy is the black velvet from which number 5 is made, and it is further enriched by the full plastron effect provided by the four pronged, red fox collar. Striking color here in the sooty black accented with red fox.

Number 6 is available in women's sizes. It is black wool in princess lines. A little belt from the side seam clasps the front of the coat to keep it in place, and mountain sable is arranged in such a way as to look generous without being bulky. Under $70.

Food Values, Budget Must Be Considered

By Mary Meade.

[Copyright: 1942: By The Chicago Tribune.]

Every extra penny these days should be used to help buy war stamps and bonds which will aid our country in these serious days and also insure our own personal futures.

It is every woman's duty, and many a woman's necessity, to cut household expenses to the bone. It is her duty, also, to see that her family is well and healthfully fed. Good food for little money presents a problem. Not that all good foods are expensive, many of them, whole grain cereals, for example, are very cheap, considering the valuable place they fill in an adequate diet. But there must be constant attention to the menu, exceedingly careful planning, wise buying, strict accounting, if our food money is going to stretch as far as it should.

First of all, the homemaker must arrive at an estimate of how much she can afford to spend on food for a week. Then she must sit down and work out a set of menus for a week, including the nutritional essentials, and keeping the food expense within the limits she has set. This planning can be only an estimate until she actually buys the food, but if she's smart, she'll be able to make small adjustments in her set of menus which will keep it in bounds. Clipping grocery advertisments and following newspaper week-end bargain columns will assist her materially in estimating costs.

Good menu making takes practice. A wise woman will be guided by authorities in foods and nutrition. A good basic guide such as "Feeding the Family," by Mary Swartz Rose, belongs in every household, I think. There are reams of magazine and newspaper stories on nutrition and menu making these days, besides hundreds of pamphlets and leaflets issued by the government and by manufacturers of food products.

No woman can buy economically unless she goes to market herself for food. For real buys, she'll need to shop around, too. Two trips to the grocery a week should be sufficient, if she has planned well. A trip on Friday or Saturday to take care of replacements of staples and buy vegetables, meats, and fruits to last until the middle of the week, and a second marketing on Tuesday or Wednesday to fill in, should take care of shopping. Meats should be loosely wrapped and stored directly under the freezing unit of a refrigerator; vegetables should be washed and kept in a vegetable bin; fruits should be stored according to their kind.

Boxes of berries need air, and mustn't be crowded. Bananas shouldn't be refrigerated unless they're being chilled for salad. Slightly underripe fruits need to be stored in a cool, dry place, not the refrigerator, until they've ripened.

Fruits and vegetables should be bought when they're abundant and, consequently, low priced. Some staples, such as flour, dried beans, and cereals, are cheaper bought in quantity if there's plenty of storage space in the pantry. Meats are a problem, always, and especially now that there's a temporary shortage of some kinds. Now's the time for the homemaker to become acquainted with the many kinds of less familiar, altho equally nutritious, meat cuts. These are less expensive than the scarce roasts, steaks, and chops.

Meats can be stretched in casserole dishes and stews so that they really aren't expensive at all. Dried bean dishes and cheese entrées can be served in place of meat now and then, too. Fish should be served at least once a week when it is available for not much money, and liver or other glandular meat belongs in a good diet as frequently.

• • •

Simple desserts such as fresh or canned fruit and fruit whips are more healthful and more economical than rich pastries and cakes which require too much sugar, anyway.

Careful, good cooking is more necessary than ever when a food budget is restricted. Overcooking vegetables is a sin, for it results in the waste of important vitamin values and makes the food of little assistance in maintaining good nutrition.

Some butter or vitamin-fortified margarine belongs in every meal, but it is foolish and costly to waste it by drowning vegetables in fat. Leftover meat drippings should be used for flavoring other foods when possible, or for cooking purposes. Then the surplus should be turned over to a meat dealer so that it may be used in the production of munitions.

• • •

Every cook should keep before her, all the time she's planning and preparing meals, the list of essentials for a good nutritious diet. They include these points:

A pint of milk a day for each person, more for children and nursing mothers.

An egg a day if possible [some used in cooking], but at least three or four a week apiece.

A serving of meat, fish, or poultry a day. Cheese and dried beans often.

At least two vegetables in addition to potatoes each day. Green and yellow vegetables most frequently. Leafy greens every day.

Citrus fruit or tomatoes every day to take care of vitamin C needs. Other fresh, canned, and dried fruits as frequently as possible.

Whole grain cereals and enriched bread to provide vitamin B-1 or every day.

thiamin. Enriched flour should be used in baking.

Some butter or fortified margarine

Thru the Looking Glass

By Eleanor Nangle

No, not a game of "peek-a-boo!" It's the start of a quick pick-up treatment for tired eyes, using a pad saturated in a cooling, cleansing mentholated solution. A ten minute rest with these pads over the eyes is a bracer when you're dull and fatigued.

[Talbot Photo.]

The reappearance on the cosmetic counters of the little flannel pads, shaped like a mask and saturated with a mentholated eye lotion, is cause for a good deal of jubilation. Not only women, but men, were fond of them and will be glad to know that they're again available, as efficient as ever and even less expensive than they were before!

Some of us have eyes that look and feel tired because of folly. Some of us can attribute the tired, taut sensation and the lack of luster to honest fatigue. In either case the mentholated solution with which these little flannel masks are saturated can be used for a fairly quick treatment that helps erase the unattractive signs. We know bookworms who wouldn't be without them; we also know some rounders who find them a great help the morning after.

• • •

These come in a glass jar, which must be kept tightly capped, by the way, because the solution mustn't be allowed to dry out. When your eyes feel as tho they were going to fall out of your head, and look so bleary that in all honesty you have to admit maybe that wouldn't be such a terrible tragedy after all, try to steal 10 minutes of peace and quiet. Lie down if you can, or sit in a chair that permits you to rest your head in a backward tilt. Close the lids, apply the moist pad [which, like a mask, extends over both eyes] and press gently against the closed eyes and the surrounding skin surface.

• • •

Be still as a mouse, but far more relaxed, and wink the eyes occasionally so that some of the mentholated solution gets right in. That's all there is to it. At the end of 10 minutes you'll feel lots better and your eyes will feel and look as bright and rested as a wide-awake baby's.

When these pads were first introduced, business men and women found them quite valuable. Lots of girls we know used them at the end of a working day before they stepped into their butterfly rôle for the evening. And some who were foolish enough to let late hours, liquor and innumerable cigarets leave their mark of a morning, found that these were good facial bracers.

These aren't to be mistaken as a cure-all for chronic eyestrain. Glasses, expertly prescribed and fitted, are the answer to that, but for cleansing dust laden eyes, resting them when they're extremely tired, or clearing them up when you've been foolish enough to read or raise the roof until dawn, they're hard to beat.

HOME OWNERS' QUERIES

Chicago—[To the Home Building Editor.]—I have heard there is a flame proofing product on the market that can be applied to household articles, including curtains, children's clothes, etc. Who manufactures this, if it is on the market?

MRS. THOMAS H.

Answer: Yes, there's such a product. If you will send me a stamped, addressed envelope I'll be glad to send you manufacturers' name and sources to contact.

Chicago—[To the Home Building Editor.]—How can we remove a green mold from bathroom pipes? Paint just won't stick on the pipes.

LETTY G.

Answer: Take some household ammonia and remove the mold. Then rinse and dry. You'll find paint will take a better hold.

Peru, Ind.—[To the Home Building Editor.]—We are building some new book shelves. Are there any precautions to take to protect books from dampness? We've been troubled in the past with books getting moldy from dampness.

HAROLD G.

Answer: Try to build shelves several inches deeper than the books you are to put into them so that you make allowance for air circulation. And don't ever crowd books.

Miss Donnelly Reports:

By Antoinette Donnelly

[Copyright: 1942: By News Syndicate Co., Inc.]

Keeping well and keeping weight under control no longer are conversation themes. Not with a war to be won! Not during a crisis, when it is your duty to keep from being sick and losing time or spreading disease, as the United States Public Health service argues.

You simply must keep well, fit, and trim. All that extra poundage, which formerly might have been laughed at as a little idiosyncrasy, more and more will appear unpatriotic. Your fall clothes, slimmer of line than ever, call for fat-free hip, thigh and calf. But you must keep well, since the shortage of civilian physicians will be felt more as time goes on, and their time should be reserved, with your co-operation, for serious and unavoidable sickness and accident.

Winfield Auxiliary Is Having Open House Today

Today is auxiliary day at the Winfield sanitarium, and the service group is holding open house for patients' relatives and friends at the institution. One of the highlights of the day will be a flag raising ceremony, conducted by Legionnaires and Boy Scouts. The visitors will be taken on a tour of inspection thru new buildings. Members of the auxiliary are leaving for the sanitarium on the 12:30 o'clock train from the North Western station, and others planning to attend are invited to join the party.

Sally Closes Party Series for the Year

By Sally Joy Brown.

[Activities of the Sally Joy Brown department are sponsored by Chicago Tribune Charities, Inc.]

Well, boys and girls, at the beginning of your summer vacation period we promised you a party every Thursday during July and August. We've kept our promise and we've had some grand times, but we've used up all the Thursdays, so our next party, which will take place on Aug. 27, will be the farewell for the year.

• • •

We've entertained almost a thousand boys and girls this summer, and the ice cream, candy, and other good things we bought for them would reach a long, long way if assembled all at once. We had a lot of fun doing it and, judging from the numerous, nice little "thank you" notes we've received, we know that our guests enjoyed our parties, too.

We're always reluctant to see the end of the party season, but school bells soon will be ringing and you'll all be busy with "readin' and ritin' and 'rithmetic," so good-by, and good luck until next year.

• • •

Here are the names of the boys and girls who have been selected as my guests for our farewell party, which will take place on Aug. 27 at the Jack and Jill theater. Personal invitations to see "The House Without a Key" will be mailed to every youngster included in this list.

Fashions as I See Them

By Judith Cass.

A young woman whose good looks and chic clothes have made her an object of admiration in Chicago circles ever since her debut days is Mrs. L. Edward Hart Jr. Mrs. Hart has been living in her summer home at Harbor Point, Mich., since Lieut. Hart went into the service, so she is not seen around Chicago often, but she did come down for the North Avenue Day nursery benefit party held recently at the junior Sidney S. Gorhams' in Winnetka, and looked as attractive as ever. She was wearing a stunning, cool looking dress of blue, pink, green, and yellow plaid, all soft colors, and her hat was a wide brimmed sailor of matching material. On her feet were bright yellow wedgies. . . . India prints make attractive and distinctive summer dresses, and there were two unusually pretty ones at the nursery benefit. Mrs. Wallace D. Mackenzie was wearing one, a long sleeved, straight skirted frock in tones of pale blue and yellow. The bodice buttoned to the waist, from a high neckline, on round wooden balls, and Mrs. Mackenzie added a six strand necklace of white beads and white earrings to complete a cool picture. Mrs. Edgar Stanton's print was in tones of mulberry and gray, and was less formal than Mrs. Mackenzie's, being a dirndl. Both young women were without hats.

Mrs. William W. Miller, a member of the benefit committee, was wearing a grass green linen jumper over a white frock printed in pinks, blues, and greens, an odd and effective combination. Mrs. William J. Lawlor Jr. came to the party in a bright gold dress, made with a full skirt, and which buttoned all the way down the front with stubby, fat, red pencils. Mrs. Fitzmorris Brittingham was in a white shirtwaist dress with surplice type blouse that was outlined in pale blue squares edged in white. Mrs. Charles S. Connell's white sports dress was enlivened with a band of blue, outlined in red, around the bottom of the skirt, and a yoke of the blue and red. . . . Mrs. Willett N. Gorham's summer wardrobe includes a refreshing frock that shows Russian influence. The skirt is a wide, swinging one of persimmon colored linen. The peasant style blouse with its long sleeves is of white, embroidered around the yoke in persimmon. Mrs. Spencer Keare sometimes appears in green from head to foot. Her dress is of uncrushable linen, and so is the tiny hat finished with a large bow that goes with it. . . . Mustard and brown are the unusual colors of the flowers printed on a white dress Mrs. Aldis J. Browne Jr. sometimes wears. Mrs. John Quincy Adams Jr. carries out the skirt and blouse theme in a pretty ensemble consisting of a plain, cream colored linen skirt, and a blouse printed in cream and green, tailored and simple.

A country luncheon party calls for an ensemble that is not quite as dark in color as a street dress that one would wear for such an occasion in the city, yet it should be more formal than the usual spectator sports dress in which suburbanites spend the majority of their time. Mrs. John Root, heading for a meeting of the woman's committee of the Russian War relief campaign, to be held this fall, achieved a perfect country luncheon costume in a brown and white print suit that had a tiered skirt, new and smart, and a three-quarter length wool coat of brown. . . . Pinkish tan was the color of the angora coat Mrs. Howard Fenton selected as her wrap to wear to the meeting, and her hat was a natural colored, fine straw beret, and berets are to be THE thing, fashion prognosticators say. The hat was trimmed with a huge brown and white quill. Mrs. Raymond Durham came to the luncheon all in white, with slit pockets outlined in navy. . . . Mrs. William Gold Hibbard, who is deeply tanned, often is seen about at Winnetka parties in a Sandringham blue dress, most flattering to her eyes, and a simple white hat. Mrs. Earl Kribben has a handsome green dress of a tweed weave with a yoke that is buttoned with fetching gold kittens in varying sizes.

Mrs. Robert A. Cavenaugh, who heads the Service club and its benefit on Oct. 13 of the "Ice Follies of 1943" at the Arena, comes to town from Lake Geneva, where she is spending the summer, in a stunning navy blue and white suit. The skirt is draped skilfully over one hip; the blouse, of white crêpe, is cut surplice fashion, and the jacket is bolero style. Miss Emily Goehst, who met with Mrs. Cavenaugh to discuss plans for the benefit, was wearing a most unusual saving stamp corsage. It was a fan shaped arrangement of nine 50 cent stamps, their delicate blue enhanced by a crisp little red, white, and blue ribbon tied around the "stems." . . . Pale blue is a becoming color to Mrs. Byron S. Harvey's dark complexion. She has a handsome summer dress, one of heavy jersey in that color. The sleeves are set in with bands of navy blue. With it she sometimes wears navy shoes and carries a navy bag, and perched on the back of her head and framed with her black curls, a little, navy wool, crocheted hat. . . . Mrs. Walter S. Brewster adds color to a gray silk summer dress with red sandals, a white alligator purse, and a long, navy blue scarf. With the dress she sometimes wears a big hat rather on poke bonnet lines. . . . Miss Jean Kellogg adds a dash of color to a black silk city suit with a hat that is covered with bright morning glories. Mrs. William Faurot recently was wearing a sky blue silk dress with a belt and hat of cerise, and pinned to the lapel of her dark coat was a corsage of most unusual tiny orchids, cerise in color, that was the gift of some of the feminine partners she furnishes for navy men at parties given at the Chicago Yacht club. Mrs. George P. Braun Jr. has a cool looking dark suit of black and white print. Its revers are of black velvet. For the marriage of her sister, Miss Frances Lasker, and Capt. Sidney Brody, U. S. A. A. C., Mrs. Lasker Foreman wore a stunning and colorful gown. It was floor length, of pale blue, and the bodice and sleeves were appliqued in an allover design of flowers of coral, yellow, and blue.

Three Hat Designers Unite Talents for Collection

Dache, Victor, John-Frederics Fuse Artistry

By Rea Seeger.

When three topflight American hat makers seriously get down to the unusual job of promoting something new in inspirational millinery, especially wearable and flattering during the high tension times of war, the results are something honestly to rave about.

This job has been accomplished, rather a staggering one to try, especially when you think of the temperamental side of it. One genius can do plenty, but three just triple the excitement and the results. The collection is a knockout. Add the spice of a well thought out mystery [no hat bears a label of the originator], mix them all up together, and even some of the expert fashion sleuths are baffled. The American women shoppers have the benefit of all of it, a superb showing of comfortable, even functional, hats designed to flatter in color, shape, and outline.

Three American milliners, Lilly Dache, Sally Victor, and John-Frederics, each presents a new brain wave to a more than approving public. There are hats of felt, hats of fuzzy velour, and hats of velvet al' designed for this first wartime autumn. There are hats that are morale sustaining units of incomparable chic and flattery, hats that will make the spirits soar, no matter what the news, and hats that will make Johnny doughboy and the rest of the men stand up and cheer.

Most important of all, these are hats designed by Americans for the American woman and all her multitudinous duties and activities. Suit hats, coat hats, small, medium, and large hats, effective, good looking millinery in all colors and black. Typical trend of the time, color, names add to the fun. Amusing labels such as relaxation bands inserted between the brim and the crown, that band of easy-to-wear, knitted or crocheted mesh or weave illustrate the spirit of the entire showing.

Felts and the velour materials are, as usual, the first arrivals for the first fall costumes. The velourish stuff makes ideal fall toppers, especially good with fuzzy wool dresses and with the many casual type costumes of dress and jacket, or suit dress combining two pieces in contrasting shades. Colors are high and spirited. A vivid gold, red, yellow, or russet hat means more verve for the gal who wears it and makes the appraising spectators snap to attention.

Orange, tea green, tangerine, russet, vivid scarlet, and some of the best shades of gunmetal and light gray, as well as a lot of very flattering beige, caramel, and tobacco brown, and beaver tones, comprise the color range. The contrasts are startling, smart, and smoothly managed by designer tricks such as piping, rolled edges, insets, flanges, concentric bands, tritoned effects in one hat, and other combines. Dash and snap are achieved with outline, height, crown, swoop, and twist of brim and, of course, the daring new color clashes managed by experts so that harmony is assured even with the most difficult of contrasts.

If you want to prove to yourself, and others, that American designers are easily surpassing anything they, or others, have done before, altho hindered or hampered by wartime economies, restrictions, and other niggling little setbacks, see this "inspirational" collection now on display in a Chicago store. Any of them may be copied to suit your particular whims and fancies, also adaptations in other colors and materials.

Sketched, five models, each a flawless example of something new for fall, hats for the day after day routine just ahead. For information, call Superior 0200.

A . . . Demure scoop-brim hat of fine soft felt, shorter in back to accommodate fur coat collars and scarfs. Extremely high crown and "relaxation band" of knitted mesh. • B . . . Two snappy bows of same material trim bonnet style hat. It's neat, smooth and smart, ready to wear snugly over the coiffure and flatter the face with dashing high colors. • . . . Copied from soldier boy hats, this felt beauty is in two harmonizing shades of felt. There's rakish slant to entire hat. • . . . One of the most distinctive models in the collection is this stunning, high Cossack hat. The triple tier effect is most certainly new. • E . . . Another trimmed hat, in velour with unusual panel thru center of high crown. Edges of panel are rolled and covered with contrasting color.

Hard to Admit.

On the House

By Louise Bargelt

If you have some paint brushes around the house that you would like to put in fit shape for a longer life of service, there's a brush cleaner on the market which is noninflammable and can be counted on to make the crustiest of old brushes appear like new, and perform as they did in their youth. . . . Under the action of this cleaner the paint softens to the point where it can be easily removed with a fork and then the brush can be washed clean. . . . Whether a brush has to remain an hour or a day in this bath depends on the state it is in.

There is still a supply of over the top door hardware on the market but it won't last indefinitely, we are told. . . . Now is the time to order those doors. . . . And speaking of garages. . . . New garages these days are built with space to store other things in them besides the family car and they can be purchased with three years to pay.

Hikers, Bike Riders Plan Many Outings

In increasing numbers Chicagoans and suburbanites have been answering the call of the open road since the hiking and bicycling clubs, in cooperation with the OCD physical fitness program, have been organizing trips for all who care to participate. Recently the Catholic Youth organization has recommended the organized outing movement to its members, pointing out the efficacy of the program toward improving the public health and increasing the vigor of both bodies and spirits. An entire issue of its Parish Service Bulletin is given to information on hiking in the Chicago region.

Some of the facts noted in the bulletin, which were furnished by Lloyd Faxon, chairman of the Chicago Trails conference and the OCD physical fitness outing committee, are that there are 200,000 acres of wooded terrain in the forest preserves of Cook, Du Page, Kane, Will, and Lake counties of Illinois, in Lake county in Indiana, and in the state parks of the two states, and that these woodlands are easily accessible by train, bus, street car, bicycle, or automobile. Cook county alone has 35,000 acres of woodland with 150 miles of marked trails.

Beautiful New Glenview Home Open to Public

By Edith Weigle.

One of the most carefully planned and attractive houses we have seen in many months is a new one in French Provincial style situated in Glenview. It is of white painted brick with russet red shutters.

For the most part this eight room home is furnished in the true Provincial manner. The dining room, for example, which is carried out in tones of mauve, green and white, has a handsome walnut table and upholstered chairs in this graceful French period. The chair coverings match the mauve chintz window draperies which have a beautiful floral design and are made in very full, tie-back style, being hung over cream net curtains.

The walls are painted mauve, to match, and there is an unusual and charming dado of mauve and cream marbleized paper. Two built-in corner cupboards are lined in green and are decorative features with their open shelves of china and glass.

A step or two away is a delightful little pine paneled breakfast room which also has a built-in cupboard framed in scalloped wood. Here the shelves are used for books and for a collection of Toby jugs, for this nook can be used for a sitting room or library, as well.

An unusual decorative touch is the floor covering, which is of mauve chintz to match the draperies and chair coverings. This fabric has been applied just as it often is to walls, and has been given several coats of shellac and varnish. Wallpaper also can be used on floors in the same manner and is equally effective.

The living room is furnished formally with elaborate floral draperies, a white upholstered sofa, a mirror glass coffee table, mahogany tables and chairs and decorative accessories, all of which stand out against the deep gray walls and white woodwork.

• • •

A beautifully curved staircase leads to the second floor where there are three bedrooms, baths, and a comfortable sitting room. The master bedroom has walls of a deep, subtle, purplish-blue, a wall-to-wall carpet of soft green and draperies, of a lighter tone than the walls, are hung under shaped valances covered in figured wallpaper. The wall against which the mahogany beds are placed also is papered.

This house, west of Wilmette in Glenview, is the property of the Catholic church of that community. It will be open to the public [for 10 cents] from 9:30 a. m. to 9:30 p. m. every day, including Sunday.

Author Spends Idle Days at Hot Springs, Va.

By Cousin Eve.

HOT SPRINGS, VA.

Serene, idle days at the Homestead go by, with nothing to mar this mountain life. So agreeable is the routine that one misses nothing, tho trips by motor to other towns are of necessity cut off, and we are set for a black-out the coming week. The whole mass of the hotel and its adjacent village will lie blotto in the hollow between the mountains, in self-imposed war discipline.

The daily train choo-choos up the valley in the early morning, bringing this and that person from the outer world, slipping down at night with those who have stayed their stint and are going back to realities.

The Harold Vanderbilts came last week for a longish stay, and the bridge players drew in their belts against the arrival of this interesting couple. Their romance years back began with bridge, and rumor had it that she was the better player. "Mike" Vanderbilt always flies down, landing at an airport up on the hill. This is a cleared spot high above the valley and used to be a favorite uphill walk of mine. This season, hot and rainy, has been a banner year for snakes, and the airport men killed 17 in one day.

Eleven o'clock in the morning is the favorite hour on the tennis lawn when the three courts are each in play. The players are many and kibitzers sit under the canvas awnings, in the shade of leafy trees, or on the casino veranda. It is one of the prettiest scenes in the world today. The onlookers are for the better part notable—the players, equally so. Ballard Moore, Arthur Bradley Campbell, William Alexander, Frank Kent, Laurens Hamilton, and Baisley Elebash play daily. Another player, whose job called him suddenly to Washington, was Col. Edward Foley, the 37 year old legal luminary lately appointed to the United States treasury from New York. Mrs. Foley is very pretty, brunette and slim, formerly Mrs. Temple Bowdoin of Manhattan, with three young Bowdoin daughters.

• • •

The dining room here is one of the hotel's remarkable features. A huge, airy place, it has a dance floor, a musicians' dais, and a great scattering of tables. Daly, the maitre d'hotel, used to diplomats, is himself diplomatic, and seats the guests in city groups. Thus Chicago families are assembled near the dance floor, the Ralph Shaws, George Ranneys, Mrs. John Ralston, Mr. and Mrs. John J. Abbott, Edward I. Cudahy, and Mrs. W. P. Nelson.

Washington, with the William R. Castles, former Supreme Court Justice McReynolds and various diplomats, sits at the north end, and New York and St. Louis sit face to face on the middle aisle. The latter delegation is large and charming this year. Mrs. Henry Elliott Banks, with Mrs. Heaton Owsley of Chicago, for handsomeness and distinction, and Miss Georgia Elliott's frocks are outstandingly smart. Mr. and Mrs. Karl Langenburg, Mrs. Charles Clark, and her daughter, Miss Mary Denman Clark, formerly Marchesa Corignani, are a few of this large group.

Cleveland people sit together at the south end and headed by Mr. and Mrs. Albert Ingalls. There is Mrs. Parmely Herrick, once hostess for her father-in-law, Myron T. Herrick, at the American embassy in Paris. Her present companion is Mrs. Martha Hyde of Paris, formerly Comtesse de Gontaul-Biron, the first wife of James Hazen Hyde, who was here last summer. Others from Cleveland are Mr. and Mrs. Albert Russel, who are most popular in all groups.

• • •

The New York group has a number of attractive widows. Of these Mrs. Montagu la Montagne, a petite blonde who has lived mostly in Paris, is the most chic, and Mrs. Willard S. Brown, Mrs. M. V. Hoffman of Tuxedo Park are runners-up. Mrs. Wallace Stillman, here with Mr. Stillman and her mother, Mrs. Dallas Bache Pratt, is the most beautiful of the New Yorkers. The two Stillman boys are in the war services.

Foremost among the single men, in fact, the doyen, is U. Grant Smith, well known in Chicago when he was chef de protocol from Washington at our last and best World's Fair, 1933. Mr. Smith was one time minister to Uruguay and has lived over the entire world on his various missions. He is the typical foreign service man, urbane, correct, reserved, full of interesting recollections, which he tells artfully.

• • •

The Ballard Moore house up on the mountain across from the Homestead is rarely without guests in summer. Early in the season Ballard Jr. had Herbert Stone Jr. of Chicago and one day last week two visitors appeared on the early train, Peggy Hambleton Murphy who has been at Norfolk since May, and Mrs. John R. Winterbotham who has been visiting her. The two girls looked fresh as daisies in spite of having sat up in the train all night in order to get here. It's just something, this matter of going places! Jack Murphy is running the stores downstate near the port of embarkation, and the visitors related that what they had seen in the last week was thrilling beyond words. Mrs. Murphy has returned to the summer hotel where she is staying and Mrs. Winterbotham has gone back to Chicago.

Quite a few people stopping here made a great error when they moved to White Sulphur last week, owing to the crowd at this caravanserie. Hardly had they unpacked and settled in, then the war department took over the entire plant and 2,000 beds for ill and badly wounded service men. Doctors, nurses, and staff are already moving in and the magnificent Greenbrier must be entirely vacated of patrons by Sept. 1. So the travelers who left have returned and are begging for the rooms they so unwisely gave up. Later on in the season, it is expected that a wing of this house will be used for convalescents who need more stimulating altitude.

The slacks of the Palm Beach beauties have excited controversy this season, but by and large Albert Ingalls thinks that definitely they've done the old place good. However, Mr. Justice McReynolds isn't used to them at all and tried to convince Mrs. LeRay Berdeau that the snappy pale blue pajamas she was wearing were quite, quite extraordinary. The precedents in the case of pajamas go back over a hundred years, as I found by delving in some precious ancient tomes from Fay Ingalls' library in his house up the road. Quoting from the Peregrine Prolix letters in 1837 we find this note of high fashion: "You should have a large cotton gown of Persian pattern lined with crimson, a fancy Greek cap, Turkish shoes, and a pair of loose pantaloons, a garb to consume little time in doffing and donning," he wrote.

And the pajama wearers of 1837 were not the first pleasure seekers in the Warm Springs valley; there were voluminous records going back to the early 18th century. Ten years before the Declaration of Independence was signed, the earliest Homestead was no longer new.

George Washington's visit to these springs nearly 200 years ago is recorded in the old tomes. He set out in 1755 with his military aides and a large retinue of slaves to provide for their comfort, for a journey into the Allegheny country. Unluckily the picturesque part of this excursion has faded into the mists of time and little remains but some receipted bills and a few historic names in the ledgers.

There are women here this season who have lived continuously in Paris since the last war. Their great amazement in America, they say, is the number and size of the cocktail parties, and nowhere could that apply better than at Hot Springs, where there's no other way to entertain.

There is Fassifern Farms, to be sure, a longish ride down the valley, where people go to lunch for a change, but the club is all abuzz every night of the week with cocktail routs and lively get-togethers. But the club was not for Mr. and Mrs. John Abbott's party. Their guests met in the Pilgrim room, which is a quaint place with geraniums at the windows and a wide view from its old windows down the mountains into far away blue evening vistas.

Benefit Party at Mackinac Big Success

MACKINAC ISLAND, MICH.

The beautiful gardens of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph C. Burrows of Park Ridge, whose summer home here is a showplace of the island, was the setting for the 11th annual benefit party for the school children's lunch fund. More than 150 attended and a large sum was realized for the island school children.

The summer cottage colony turned out en masse for the event, highspot of the afternoon social events of the season. Three Chicagoans, all summer residents, were on the committee which sponsored the fête, Mrs. John L. Cochran, Mrs. E. Wilfred Puttkammer, and Mrs. Peter G. S. Mero. Others were Mrs. M. H. Benjamin and Mrs. Sara Doherty of Mackinac Island. It was sponsored by the Women's guild of Mackinac Island.

A feature of the afternoon's entertainment was a fashion show with Phyllis Thompson of Chicago, Gloria Barnes of Decatur, and Kathryn Register of Jacksonville, Fla., modeling slacks, sport, and casual summer frocks. Mrs. Mero and Betty Peabody of Lake Forest modeled evening gowns. William R. Hodgkinson of Chicago was master of ceremonies and "barker" as the young women paraded thru the grounds and gardens.

The handsome Burrows stables served as a Midway, where baked goods, flowers, and other articles were offered. There was a fish pond for the youngsters, but the pony ride attraction collapsed when "Delphinium," the pony, turned bashful and disappeared into the woods.

Guests were thrilled by the floral display, both in the gardens and stables. There were tall vases strategically placed thruout the white enameled stables, on tables thruout the garden. Miss Peabody and Nancy Cochran were two of the most active flower sellers. The demand for costume matching flowers, from dark reds, purples, browns, and yellows, to the pastel pinks, blues, and lavenders were particularly popular. Leis of daisies and black-eyed Susans, all sewed by the girls, were quickly snapped up by the guests.

Visiting the Jay Biedler Camps of Chicago at their cottage here are the Allen Gilberts of Kenilworth, who have brought their three children, Betsy, Helen, and Leonard. They will stay about 10 days.

A front porch cocktail party was given the other evening by Mrs. Mero and her mother, Mrs. Louis T. Jaques, at their West Bluff cottage overlooking the straits. The porch and entire lower floor of the house were profusely decorated with flowers, Mrs. Mero's hobby. About 60 guests, including most of the Chicago cottage colony, attended, along with other friends summering here.

Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Leighty and their daughter, Barbara, have come up from Park Ridge to spend some time at the Burrows cottage.

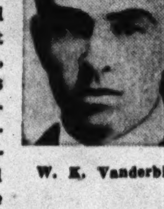
When Chicago Was Young

—By Herma Clark—

Letters from Martha Freeman Esmond to her friend Julia Boyd of New York.

Aug. 31, 1894.

Dear Julia: We came back from Oconomowoc a week ago, refreshed by our holiday. Today we attended the funeral of Mr. John Newell, a family friend, living on Ontario street. He died suddenly at Youngstown, O., as he was on his way to a sanitarium. His family was scattered, his wife and daughter in the east; his son traveling. Another daughter, Mrs. James R. Garfield, who married a son of the late President of the United States and who lives in Mentor, O., was the first to reach him. His career has been a notable one, for he rose from the ranks to become president of the great Lake Shore and Michigan Southern railroad. He was an indefatigable worker and it was his ambition to make his railroad the best equipped in the country. The family is highly regarded here and the funeral was attended by many from out of town, mostly railroad men, among these being Cornelius Vanderbilt.



W. K. Vanderbilt.

Mentioning Cornelius Vanderbilt, I am reminded to speak of his brother, William K. Vanderbilt, whose name is seen so much in the dispatches from Paris and also in columns from Newport. I suppose, being in Newport, you hear a great deal about the gossip that says he and his wife are to be divorced or, at least, separated. I remember hearing from some one—not you, for you aren't inclined to write of such things—that there was a dreadful quarrel on board the yacht Valiant last spring when they had taken a party for a trip in the Mediterranean. The party broke up as a result, each one going his or her own way and Mrs. Vanderbilt taking a large place near Henley in England. The dispatches in our papers say the trouble is caused by Mr. Vanderbilt's attentions to a pretty Dutch maiden named Nelly Neustretter, with whom he is often seen, who lives in luxury in Deauville, and whose servants wear the same livery worn by the servants of Mrs. Vanderbilt. This would indeed be hard for her to bear, and one can't wonder that she wants a separation.

Much is said in the dispatches about her meeting with Mr. Vanderbilt, he a young man of 28 just returned from an extended stay abroad, and she a southern beauty, one of three exquisitely lovely sisters from Mobile. It was at a reception given by his sister, Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard, in his honor and he was charmed at once by the golden haired, blue eyed Alva Smith, say the papers. Of course, you must know them, living in Newport, and doubtless you have been entertained in their palace on the cliffs which he built for her.

I understand that she really put the Vanderbilt family in a better social position than it had enjoyed before the marriage, for Ward McAllister and Mrs. Astor had frowned upon them, while the lovely southern bride came from a family which the arbiters of New York society couldn't fail to acknowledge was the equal of any in New York.

It seems silly, doesn't it? Our American way of life has always been so different. Your mother and my own were "exclusive" in the sense that they preferred associating with well bred people, but they didn't cultivate acquaintances just because they were "in society." They recognized character. But today New York and, in a lesser degree, Chicago, seem concerned with trivialties. I heard a young man, the son of one of my best friends, say recently that a gentleman shouldn't carry a parcel on the street, tho he did except a book which he didn't consider a parcel. I suppose he felt it degrading to bear a burden of any kind. He has spent a good deal of time abroad and has absorbed aristocratic notions. His own father was a poor boy when he came to Chicago, and by hard work laid the foundation for the great fortune which enables this young fellow to live in luxury. Now the son feels quite above work of any kind. I fear for our country when I see such folly. And now, my dear, I must close. Lovingly yours,

MARTHA FREEMAN ESMOND.

FOOT NOTES.

No member of the Newell family, once prominent in Chicago, now lives here, we believe.

William K. Vanderbilt [1849-1920], son of William H. and grandson of "Commodore" Cornelius Vanderbilt, added to the family fortune and was a collector of art as well as an enthusiastic yachtsman and patron of the races. He was one of a syndicate which built and sailed the Defender, successful holder of the American cup against a British challenger in 1895. He bequeathed his paintings to the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

In March, 1895, he was divorced by his wife who later married O. H. P. Belmont. William K. Vanderbilt married Mrs. Anna Harriman Sands Rutherford, daughter of Oliver Harriman in 1903. He left three children, all by his first wife, William K. Jr., Harold S., and Consuelo. The latter married the Duke of Marlborough in 1895. Mrs. Belmont died in 1933.

How to conduct "polite conversation," as the Victorians termed it, is described in one of Herma Clark's literary oddities included in the "Victorian Keepsake"—a beautifully bound 96 page souvenir booklet. Bicycles and Photography.

"Most of the bicycles you mention in your column of Aug. 2," writes Oscar P. Schneider of 7223 Paxton avenue," were specially hand made by Nelson at 2206 South Michigan avenue. Many times as a boy I went into his shop to watch him assemble them. My father was the oldest photographer in Chicago and when my brother sold the business in 1940 it had been in the hands of the family for 63 years. It started at 2137 Archer avenue in 1877. I enjoy your column very much."

Poem of the Week.

For a Soldier Son.

Col. W. G. Edens of Chicago sends us a copy of an old poem inscribed by a mother in the back of a Bible given to a soldier son April, 1862, and found on a Civil war battlefield. Quaint and old fashioned as it is, many mothers will wish to have it to send to soldier sons. Charlevoix Club Boon to Visiting Wives

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

It is a real joy to know that long before the days when women demanded and received their rights and recognition there were a few understanding men who comprehended that a summer cottage was not the same carefree vacation for the wife and mother of a family as it was for the men and children. It is all very well to have a charming summer home and school friends of the children and golfing friends of the man of the family for indefinite visits, but when it comes to planning and buying and supervising the cooking of three meals a day for a hungry crowd, that's another story. So, back in 1881 the Chicago club here has started as a resort with the idea of giving the women a real vacation too. No one was, or is allowed to keep house but every one eats in the central dining room of the main clubhouse.

When Silas H. Moore and Caleb Gates chose the present site for a club it was a burned-over sandy point of land on Pine lake. Today it is heavily wooded with pine and birch and maple trees. Dr. Mount Reid of Cincinnati owns the original Moore home. Shortly after the founding of the club John P. Wilson also built a cottage, which today is the spacious and lovely home of the William B. McIlvaines. Mr. Wilson's son and grandson both have cottages at the club.

In the early days morning prayers were held daily in the clubhouse for the entire family. The fleet of sailboats of the club has always been one of the loweliest sights on the lake. The war has curtailed the sailing considerably as so few of the younger members are here. However, last Saturday the club had an informal race. Dr. and Mrs. Reid and Freddy sailed Mr. Wilson's boat, Nassau, and Firefly, belonging to Joseph King, was sailed by the junior George S. Chappells.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Keep of Sheffield, Mass. and their daughter, Lindsay, arrived Saturday to visit Mrs. Keep's mother, Mrs. Wilson. The Frederick Scotts' daughter, Mrs. Langdon Hubbard and her two children "Hap" and Carol, of Grosse Pointe, also arrived on Saturday for the remainder of the season.

Mr. and Mrs. Scott Bromwell of Lake Forest and their two children, Bonnie and Scott Jr., are with Mrs. Bromwell's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Solomon A. Smith.

A few years ago Mrs. William Bush was visiting friends at Harbor Point. She walked by a gloomy unattractive cottage and was told it could be bought "for a song." Being in an adventuresome mood she flippantly made an offer. Much to her astonishment she received a long distance call some weeks later that the house was hers. So, Mrs. Bush returned to the Point to take stock of her "white elephant."

The location was lovely, right on the curve of the bay facing Harbor Springs, and the lines of the house were good. With zeal and vision she began to make plans. Windows were put in, dark porches were removed, a whole wing was added, the dark woodwork was changed to Canadian cypress paneling downstairs. Gay print wall paper was put upstairs, bathrooms were added and so forth. Today it is one of the most attractive and lovely cottages on the Point. It is modern Swedish in architecture, with the living room in blue and rust with double reverse band sawed lambrikins and quaint Swedish chintz curtains and occasional chairs. Perhaps the most charming room is the dining room, overlooking the bay in the added wing. The Canadian cypress paneling runs horizontally with an old medieval Swedish fresco around the wall.

On the breakfast porch Mrs. Bush has three blue chairs in a Swedish design with the name of one of her grandchildren, Ruth, Caroline, and Wendy on the back of each. There are also flagstones leading to the garden, each with a grandchild's name on it. Angel Cottage it is called, and it is a cottage that looks like fun and laughter and reflects the charm of its owner.

Donald O'Brien, son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard O'Brien, was a humorous and clever master of ceremonies at Mrs. Eugene Gray's fashion show Wednesday evening at the Little Harbor club. Dinner was served on the terrace and balcony of the club. The tables with their gay colored tablecloths and matching flowers and hurricane lamps and the lovely models in their attractive dresses all added to the beauty of the summer night. The theme of the fashion show concerned the activities of a mythical Betty, who, due to the war does not make a debut but enters the various phases of war work and eventually marries an admiral. A stunning dinner dress in five shades of rose was worn by Mrs. Frank E. Pierce Jr., when "Betty" had tea at the Biltmore. Mrs. L. Edward Hart Jr., as "Betty" was "toast of the fleet" in a black crêpe model with a green turban and natural Canadian mink coat. To war work went Betty in a tailored green two piece suit with a green and purple plaid top-coat. Betty this time was Mrs. George Oram. Many Chicagoans had small dinner parties. Among, those entertaining were Mr. and Mrs. James R. Offield, Dr. and Mrs. Frank E. Pierce, Mr. and Mrs. William Waller, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Woodruff of Joliet, and Harriet Seaton of Peoria.

• • •

Dr. and Mrs. Pierce also entertained at luncheon at the Little Harbor club last Sunday for Dr. and Mrs. Frank Brawley, who are visiting the LeRoy Kramers and for their son and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Pierce Jr. The junior Pierçes and their small son, Frank III., are up for a week's visit with the senior Pierces. Mr. and Mrs. Kramer entertained for the Brawleys at a dinner and bridge party in their cottage last Saturday night.

Mrs. Wheeler has her infant grandson and his mother, Mrs. Henry L. McIntyre, visiting her for the rest of the summer. Her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Robert T. Wheeler, is also with her for a week.

Margaret Winston will give a luncheon at her cottage in Wequetonsing on Wednesday for Kay Woodruff who is spending a few weeks with her parents at the Harbor Point club.

• • •

Mrs. Howard O'Brien has the best women's golf score of the year on the Harbor Point club course. Last week Mrs. O'Brien shot an 82. Par is 80.

Mrs. Arthur William Wilson and her daughter, Mrs. Maurice Van Arsdale are at the Belvedere club visiting Mrs. Wilson's sister Mrs. John Grassell. Mrs. Grassell has just returned from a week's visit with her son and his wife, the Philip Grassells. They will be up next week-end with their two daughters, Martha Jane and Gloria.

Alpha Delta Pi to "Rush" 200 at Wednesday Tea

The year is almost at the time for the perennial procession of youth back to the classroom and already the sorority "rushing" parties for the freshmen are under way. Illinois alumnae of Alpha Delta Pi are among the first to make their bid for girls of the new college generation, having 200 invitations out in the Chicago area for a tea at 2 o'clock Wednesday in the Illini Union building, 715 South Wood street.

Miss Martha Hobart. [Ostroff Photo.]

Miss Martha Hobart of Aurora, as "rushing" chairman, is one of the leaders of the group planning the party. Others taking an active part are Mrs. Harry W. Pearce of Glen Ellyn, Mrs. Carl Nelson of Northbrook, Mrs. Harold Ekroth of La Grange, Miss Marjorie Reisz of Maywood, Mrs. Henry Droba of Glencoe, Mrs. Benjamin Kral of 1918 South Ashland avenue, and Mrs. Howard R. Peterson of 5543 Kimbark avenue.

Most of the young guests are matriculating at middle western colleges and universities. One of the oldest societies for women in higher education, Alpha Delta Pi was founded in 1851 at the Wesleyan Female college at Macon, Ga., which was the first chartered college for women in this country.

Gloucester Observes Its Tricentennial

BEVERLY, MASS.

Gloucester, famed the world over as a fishing port and the home of sturdy men and women, marked the 300th anniversary of its incorporation as a town with a three day program in which the history from the early days of the colony passed in swift review.

It opened with religious services in the churches, then a special program at the Fisherman's Memorial, where tribute was paid to hundreds of Cape Ann fishermen, "Captains Courageous" who have lost their lives at sea. Exercises at the entrance to the city made up much of the program for the second day, while a military and civic parade, colorful and inspiring, was the feature of the closing day. The history of the nation from its earliest settlement was reflected in the observance, which drew thousands of visitors to the seacoast city.

Race week at Marblehead is just over, and it was a success, altho far different from those experienced in the happier days before the war. Marblehead is known the world over as a yachting center. Its harbor, before the war, provided mooring places for stately yachts, sail and power, but it was a much different picture for race week. Many of the fine yachts of the power class are already in the service, doing patrol duty up and down the shore on the watch against enemy submarines, while some are in far distant waters carrying on like work or engaged in other essential naval duties.

The social life was missing, and much of its gayety. There are few large craft upon which entertaining was done, while the yacht clubs, the Eastern, Corinthian, and Boston, were all subject to dim-out regulations. At the cottages there was as usual considerable entertaining but the band concerts, fireworks, and other night features were missing. Colonists took it all in good stride—sacrifices were willingly made in order to carry out the program to help win the war.

All of the north shore colonies were represented in the spectators' row and in the exhibition ring when the North Shore Kennel club held its annual dog show on the polo field of the Myopia Hunt club in Hamilton yesterday afternoon. The show featurned dogs for defense, and many of the dogs trained at Myopia will be turned over to the army for training in sentry duty.

Mr. and Mrs. John S. Mechem and their young sons have been enjoying a north shore stay with Mrs. John C. Mechem of Lake Forest and Washington at their Rockport summer home on Cape Ann. The Mechems were for many years summer residents at Annisquam, but this season have a cottage on Union lane in the charming Rockport district.

For many of the Chicago sojourners the "tunkets" at Topsfield have been enjoyable experiences. These "tunkets," or dances, feature the old fashioned square dances with the old time music makers and the caller who directs the quadrille, Virginia reels, waltzes, polkas, and the other dances ruled as favorites in the gay '90s.

Miss Lucia Winston has returned to her home in Lake Forest after a visit with Miss Anne Harrison of Washington at the Harrison summer home in Manchester.

The many friends of Mrs. Ira Nelson Morris are pleased at her recovery from recent illness and treatment at a Boston hospital. Mrs. Morris is planning a long stay at Eagle Head, her Manchester summer home, before returning to Chicago.

Mrs. C. Groverman Ellis and her children, Mary Jane and Nancy Ellis, have returned to Chicago after a visit with Mrs. Ellis' father, Arthur G. Leonard of Chicago, at Druimteac, the Leonard summer home out on Eastern point at Gloucester. Mr. and Mrs. Arthur G. Leonard Jr. and their daughter, Miss Jane Leonard, have returned to Wilmington, Del., after a pleasant stay at Druimteac. Miss Leonard is to make her debut in Chicago in September.

Mr. and Mrs. Barrett Wendell have returned to Chicago after a visit to Homewood, their summer house on Old Bay road in the Myopia district in Hamilton.

Outmoded, perhaps, but if the skins are still in good condition, our skilled fur craftsmen can give it a fresh start in life. ✓ Painstakingly they will take it apart, skin by skin. Each pelt will be carefully re-shaped and re-conditioned. ✓ Then a new canvas will be cut and fitted, and from this custom designed canvas will emerge a stunning new model fashioned from your finest re-conditioned skins. ✓ The result will be amazing . . . the price surprisingly modest considering the added wear and beauty you will enjoy.

If you like the popular new 36-inch length, it is unlikely that any new skins will be needed. If they are, they will be priced at lowest market prices.

NOW is the time to act, while we can give you the advantage of unhurried workmanship and slack season price.

Women Active in Promoting the War Show

By Judith Cass.

There will be a steady stream of humanity pouring into Soldiers' field from Sept. 2 to 12 for the great Army War show which will benefit the Army Emergency relief.

Every man, woman, and child will be fascinated by a trip to the war show. During the afternoons the field will be set up as a training camp in which the officers and men, 2,000 of them from every department of the army, actually are undergoing training. At night this task force will engage in a sham battle to demonstrate its equipment and training, which will show the use of every type of weapon. Each unit will give an individual demonstration.

• • •

The purpose of the show is to give citizens the opportunity to see their modern army at first hand, its equipment and its uses, and how the army lives, works, and fights. The show is designed to strengthen civilian morale and thereby inspire a greater war production effort, and to raise funds for the army relief. It is expected that the proceeds from the box seats alone will pay the expenses of the show, and the general admission and other reserved seats will bring a handsome total to the army relief.

General admission is 55 cents. Souvenir tickets may be purchased in advance, so that there will be no waiting at the gates. These tickets also entitle the holder to visit the battle depot, which will be on view under tents just outside the field. Otherewise admission to the battle depot, which includes an exhibit of every type of weapon and war equipment; a field hospital; captured German Messerschmitt and Japanese planes and other interesting items, will be 25 cents.

• • •

Some of the women who are taking an active interest in the war show are Mrs. Walter B. Wolf, vice chairman of the women's division of the war savings staff of the treasury; Mrs. Jones Jarratt, who is on the box committee; Mrs. James A. Cathcart of the Red Cross; Mrs. Leo Cummings, also of the treasury; Mrs. Frank Fuller of the Winnetka army relief, and Mrs. Robert F. Carr Jr. of the Chicago Junior league. Box seats will be sold at $5.50 each. There are 1,500 of them. The first box was purchased by Mrs. Albert Bigler. Souvenir tickets may be purchased at 22 East Randolph street.

The police and firemen's show will not be held this summer, for it would be an anti-climax to the grand and thrilling war show, and, too, police and firemen are too busy teaching civilians to have time to train for their usual exhibits. Anything would be an anti-climax to the magnificent spectacle arranged by the war department, except that entertainment which is to follow, Ringling Brothers, Barnum and Bailey circus, which will open on Sept. 14. The circus will not be held in the field proper, however, but in the vast parking area to the east.

The Woman's Aid society of the Passavant Memorial hospital has taken over the opening night of the circus as its 1942 benefit, a task that any less able and energetic group of women might hesitate to undertake. All seventy boxes already have been sold. The society, which has headquarters at 906 North Michigan avenue, is selling only the 3,500 reserved section seats. Today the debutantes of this season, and the other young women who are to sell programs, flowers, and in other ways assist at the benefit, will be having tea with the committee at 4 o'clock at Jacques' restaurant.

The Grant Park concerts have been having large audiences this summer, too. On Tuesday night, at a gala concert in which stars of radio and screen will appear, Janis Porter, who in private life is Mrs. Homer Lange, will sing the new song, "Buy a Share in America." It was written by Slater C. Brockman, dramatic instructor of the Chicago Park district.

Cape Cod Has Busy Week with 2 Flower Shows

CAPE COD, MASS.

Topping all other weeks of the season with its round of social events, the last seven days on Cape Cod have witnessed two flower shows, a sale conducted by summer visitors to aid the Massachusetts state department of education, division of the blind, the staging of the third annual salon of photography by the Cape Cod Photographic society and the all-important affair of the summer, the "Gala evening with Gertrude Lawrence" at the Wianno club.

The exhibits of choice floral beauty were held in Provincetown—by the Nautilus club—and in Falmouth—under the auspices of the Falmouth Garden club. The former was unusual in that the prizes for class winners were articles which would be of use to garden enthusiasts and also because it provided an opportunity for displaying produce grown in victory gardens.

The sale in the interest of the blind, held on Thursday at the Hyannisport club, found a large committee of colonists assisting and also making purchases of distinctive types of handiwork taught to the blind to help them earn a living. Five Chicagoans were represented in the photo exhibit held thruout the week at the Hyannis Woman's club with a total of 187 pictures on public view. Edward C. Crossett, a member of the board of judges, Anne Pilger Dewey, Vernon G. Leach, Stuyvesant Peabody, and D. Ward Pease were the Chicagoans whose camera technique won them representation in the salon.

• • •

Far overshadowing anything else held on the Cape this season was the "Gala Evening with Gertrude Lawrence," for which many hundred year-round and summer residents turned out Friday to help raise money for the purchase of such things as a motion picture projector to be used at the outposts where servicemen are stationed. Sponsored by the Gertrude Lawrence chapter of the American Theater Wing for War Relief, the event received such enthusiastic response that a comfortably filled ballroom greeted the star's double feature bill.

The program opened in the afternoon with an auction of new and antique articles, followed by tea dancing and a buffet supper. At night, remaining articles were auctioned by Miss Lawrence and there was a gala entertainment and dancing. By special request, the Broadway star sang her song "Jenny," from the play "Lady in the Dark," assisted by a chorus of servicemen, and later in the evening she danced a tango with Lieut. Barney Creamer.

• • •

Scheduled on the list of activities at the Wianno club this week-end was a special meeting of the Wianno club stockholders in the main clubhouse to which all interested in golf, yachting, or tennis were cordially invited.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin P. Rankin of Chicago, their children, Jack, Thomas, and Janice, were relaxing on the beach at Halliday Acres in Brewster the other day with their guests, the Rev. and Mrs. Harold MacNeill of Pawtucket, R. I.

The two day dance festival of the Cape Cod Institute of Music in East Brewster, which featured Monna Montes of the Metropolitan Opera company ballet and Jack Gansert, late of the Jooss ballet, brought to the institute many of the summer colonists.

Two little white bunnies, frolicking farmers and a farmerette, an angel, a soldier of the French revolution, jolly peaked capped clowns, and a Hawaiian charmer, a sailor and a demure little Bo Peep were glimpsed about the Oyster Harbors club the afternoon of the club's annual children's party. There was a grand march, musical chairs, a peanut hunt and other games as part of the festivities. Then, loaded with prizes, paper caps and balloons, the group adjourned for refreshments.

The costume judges found making a decision almost impossible. Tina Cassinerio of Chicago, the angel, received the award for the prettiest; the bunnies, Jimmy and Richard Burnes of Framingham, Mass., grandchildren of Mrs. Robert M. Roloson of Chicago, were voted the funniest, and the "three little sisters," Barbara, Alys, and Lucy Ann Boyd of Hartford, Conn., were judged most original. The Boyd girls were dressed alike in different colors, carried sheet music and wore signs on their backs indicating their affections.

ENGAGED

Miss Edith Elliott's engagement to Jack Gerlach of Elkhorn, Wis., has been announced by her mother, Mrs. Herbert Hinchliffe, and Mr. Hinchliffe. Miss Elliott is the daughter of Allen W. Elliott. Her fiance's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Joseph L. Gerlach of Elkhorn.

DAR's Urged to Expedite Plasma Funds

By Irene Steyskal.

Members of the Daughters of the American Revolution thruout the country were urged last week by their president general, Mrs. William H. Pouch, to expedite the raising of funds for the expansion of the blood plasma project. In a message directed to all chapters of the society, Mrs. Pouch emphasized the urgency of the need for blood plasma equipment, and reminded the women that it was the DAR that gave the American Red Cross its first mobile unit.

• • •

"We believe that the conservation of life in our armed forces is a sacred responsibility evolving, to a great extent, upon the civilian population," Mrs. Pouch declared. "Well over a year ago the DAR gave to the Red Cross its first mobile blood plasma unit, and we are told that the car has been steadily in use collecting blood donations and transporting them to the plasma centers. We have made the providing of this life saving equipment one of our principal war works.

Funds for the plasma units are being raised by voluntary contributions from members, with chapter treasurers and regents directing the drive. Surgical and medical equipment also will be purchased. The money is to be disbursed by the national treasurer of the society, upon the request of the executive committee and with the advice of the national defense and Red Cross committee chairmen.

• • •

One of the war charities of the society, that of sending canceled stamps to England as a fund raising project for the upkeep of beds for crippled children in Queen's hospital in London, must be abandoned, it has been announced at DAR headquarters in Washington, D. C. More than a ton of stamps, disposed in small bundles between bags and bales of goods in cargo vessels, have been sent to England for sale to collectors and other agencies, but all cargo space now must be restricted to essential war materials.

• • •

Miss Emeline A. Street of New Haven, Conn., whose conservation committee directed the stamp collection for England, has advised individual chapters, however, to continue their collecting and sell the stamps in this country to raise funds for other war relief activities. Several hundreds of pounds of stamps which the war work committee in New York was preparing for shipment will be sold to dealers, and the money derived from the sale will be made available for American relief.

Art Institute Buys Canvas by Sepeshy

By Eleanor Jewett.

One of the most recent purchases of the Art institute is of a painting by a Michigan artist, Zoltan Sepeshy, called "January." It is one of a series of winter scenes painted by Sepeshy in the last few years. "January" gives us a snow covered highway stretching off into the distance with bare trees on either side of the road and a scanty patch of green here and there, showing thru the snow. A wintry sky, cold and forbidding, adds to the atmosphere of the picture.

"January" has been exhibited in a number of shows. It was on view in the San Francisco Golden Gate exhibition and it was shown in the 1940 Annual American Paintings exhibit at the Art institute. The artist is represented in many museums and collections over the country. He is noted for his fine work in tempera. Sepeshy is director of the painting department at Cranbrook academy, near Detroit.

Eugenie F. Glaman, whose "Ewe and Lamb" was reproduced last Sunday in this column, writes a word about her work. The spirited "Chicago Scene" which was on exhibition in June at the Woman's Salon, Findlay galleries, was painted from her studio windows at the stockyards. It is an authentic bit of stockyard life, as the cow ponies are tied like that every morning in that very spot, and the ring itself is alive with the movements of the men and other horses going about their business.

"The Golden Bull," a stunning head exhibited at the Chicago galleries, 215 North Michigan avenue, is one of two studies Mrs. Glaman made from an imported Scotch Shorthorn bull named Colrossie Mercury, owned by Thomas E. Wilson. The studies of the bull were painted at Edellyn, Mr. Wilson's farm, and one was retained by Mr. Wilson.

Aside from Mrs. Glaman, we know of only one other Chicago artist who has painted extensively at the Union Stockyards, Walter Krawiec. Mr. Krawiec made a brillian series of paintings of the various activities at the yards, from the cow pens to the slaughtering of pigs. A group of his paintings were shown at the Chicago galleries.

• • •

A number of years ago, Joseph Pennell, the great etcher, made a superb set of etchings and lithographs at the stockyards. A few of these were shown at the Albert Roullier Art galleries, Fine Arts building, this spring. Pennell found, with Mrs. Glaman and Mr. Krawiec, that an industry which one might not readily associate with the gentle art of painting is in truth filled with opportunities for the draftsman and artist. Perhaps with the war limiting our ability to sight seeing far from home, Chicago may discover the beauty and excitement which are definitely inherent in the live stock industry.

The Chicago Forum on Russian Affairs, room 705, 30 North La Salle street, has placed on view and on sale a selected number of colorful soviet union posters which reached Chicago recently direct from Kuibyshev, U. S. S. R. The Forum is the only place in Chicago which has these original posters. They are well worth seeing and owning too, if you are interested in poster art.

The Chicago Forum on Russian Affairs a short time ago received a letter from Voks [Society for Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries] asking for any publications describing American life and culture. Especially desirable is everything relating to the participation of American intellectuals in the present war—all sorts, that is, of war literature, war songs, war plays, and war posters. Any material that may be sent to the forum will be very welcome and one may be sure it will be sent on to Russia as soon as possible.

The South Side Art association members have been in the limelight to an intriguing degree recently. One of them, Dobrila Hansen, has been enjoying a successful exhibit at the Benedict gallery, Hull House. Another, Esther Austin, won first prize for "Flowers and Still Life" in the June-July exhibition at the new Wawasee Art gallery. Her painting was entitled "Yellow Roses."

Florence White Williams sold a large canvas, "Winter," to the Hyde Park High school for the social room. An earlier painting by her balances this more recent purchase. The two pictures together are most effective. Miss Williams is well known for her landscapes.

"SISTERS," BY WILLIAM EARL SINGER

Innovation in Chicago Woman's Club Bridge Play

Bridge in the lounge is the order of the afternoon at the Chicago Woman's club each Wednesday, play following a late morning program and luncheon. Thruout the summer the winners have been rewarded with a steady diet of war stamps, but even patriotic interest requires an occasional variation if it is to be sustained, and this Mrs. Julius J. Bensabott, the bridge chairman, proposes to supply at the closing session on Sept. 30.

Mrs. J J. Bensabott. [Walinger photo.]

The gift of the season, which one of the fortunate bridge players will take home from the closing party, will be a hand carved Chinese teakwood table which has an interesting history. Teakwood is the hardest wood known. The Canton artist who carved Mrs. Bensabott's table worked on it for five months.

Mrs. Samuel Verner Robuck, "club in summer" chairman, has arranged a varied program for Wednesday, which Scotte Sloan will open at 11 o'clock, directing assembly singing. The speaker will be Mary Kennedy, personnel officer of a large loop bank and author of articles on personnel development. Elizabeth Anderson will play a piano group. The hostess at the afternoon bridge session will be Mrs. Ira C. Humphrey.

The Red Cross production unit will work from 9 to 4 o'clock Thursday.

Women in War Work

The housewife whose home duties continue to take so much of her time that she feels she is not doing her share in the war effort should be interested in the recently published "The Family in a World at War," edited by Sidonie Matsner Gruenberg [director, Child Study Association of America], Harper and Brothers, $2.50.

A compilation of essays on family problems in wartime, the book indicates the increasingly important responsibilities of the homemakers who are, in the final analysis, the center of family life. In her discussion of the subject, Mrs. Gruenberg says:

"There is no little danger that, in meeting the immediate demands of the emergency, we may inadvertently sacrifice those very values for which we are called upon to fight. It always was for hearth and home that men ventured out for new hunting grounds and new pastures. And it was for hearth and home that men laid down their lives when assaulted by invaders or marauders. And now that we are at war, it is the family for which we are fighting. . . . Every attack on problems of public welfare comes back to the family and its way of life. Every attempt to advance the health and strength of our fighting forces comes back to the family. The vital problem of morale turns out to be a question of the family and its workings."

• • •

A group of 20 contributors discusses as many angles of the various problems of the family. Dorothy Canfield Fisher writes that this war is a challenge to American women. Rather pitilessly she analyzes "those hours . . . spent in needlessly going there and back, of which there is a prodigious amount in modern life." This emergency is an opportunity for women who, "by taking on any voluntary war work they are asked to do, and while on the job, giving themselves the best possible training and study to do it with increasing skill and ability . . . will be doing themselves, personally, the greatest possible service . . . in serving their country . . . women can provide proof that freely done work can be done as expertly as paid for work."

Pearl Buck and other writers in the book make a plea for letting children "each according to his age . . . know what happens in war exactly as he would know about a disease in his vicinity and how to guard against it and what its dangers are." She suggests letting the life of the world stream thru homes to be observed by the children. Whether some mothers may agree or not, at least the book holds well considered viewpoints for those who cannot help but have questions.

• • •

Dr. Thomas T. Mackie writes on the nutritional aspect of public morale. Dr. Mackie describes as an adequate and protective diet: Daily consumption of one pint of milk, two servings of green vegetables and fruit, raw or properly cooked, whole grain breads and cereals, and freshly cooked potatoes. He describes food as a munition of war; the housewife is, then, a woman in war work every time she cooks a meal. It is her responsibility not to destroy food elements.

Louise Stanley, chief of the bureau of home economics, United States department of agriculture, writes under the subject, "Science of Nutrition at the Home Base," and includes 11 rules to prevent food value losses in cooking. These include old and good advice such as using as little water as possible; saving water in which vegetables have been cooked; quick serving of food after food is cooked.

• • •

Women who have thought of the possibility of becoming foster mothers to children evacuated from coast areas, or of having to send their own children to the country, will be interested in Susan Isaacs' article, "Children of Great Britain in Wartime." Miss Isaacs is head of the department of child development, Institute of Education, London, England.

Adults who may have made poor showings in their high school history lessons probably recall that patient instructors explained to them that learning the story of the past helped in solving the problems of the future. Perhaps there may be some disagreement with that argument for learning, but we all have been deeply interested in how moving children from one place to another works out. Miss Isaacs supplies a survey of evacuated children conducted in the autumn of 1939 and spring of 1940.

A child who goes to a new home is likely to miss many of the things the adult may feel he's well rid of. If better clothes are supplied, the child often is resentful of the implied criticism of the poor clothes his mother had put on him. Difference of speech idiom, of table manners, of food all make up problems of adjustment for the youngster.

Paul V. McNutt describes the problems and new responsibilities of keeping the family together in America's new boom towns of war production. He says: "Over and over again we have assured each other that 'the family is the foundation of our society.' Like the line 'In God We Trust' on our coins, the words wear thin with usage, and the keen edge of meaning is dulled by time. "Every homemaker who has gone to live in such a community has increased care in keeping her family morale high, and every homemaker already established in such a community has a responsibility toward the newcomers.

• • •

Brig. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, Eleanor Roosevelt, Anna W. M. Wolf of the Child Study Association of America, and well known sociologists and psychologists make up the authorship of this book.

While much of the space is devoted to factual data on nutrition, advice to women in war jobs [they are told, for instance, that marketing can be cut down and that at least some of the cleaning can be neglected occasionally], there is an excursion into less tangible subject matter. Dr. James S. Plant, director, Essex county juvenile clinic, Newark, N. J., writes about "Emotional Strains in Time of Crisis." In conclusion he borrows the poem of the Chinese Wang-Wei who wrote 4,000 years ago about the most worthwhile thing in life:

"I am old.
Nothing interests me now.
Moreover, I am not very intelligent
And my ideas
Have never traveled further than my feet.
I know only my forest
To which I always come back.
You ask me,
'What is the supreme happiness here below?'
It is listening to the song of a little girl
As she goes on down the road,
After having asked me the way."

Summer Wanes, but Ephraim Is Busy as Ever

EPHRAIM, WIS.

With the arrival of cold nights has come the realization for many that vacation plans for the summer of 1942 must materialize immediately or be forever relegated to the realm of "might have beens." Many new cottage residents have arrived for the balance of the season and other regular summer residents are entertaining relatives and friends.

Mrs. Edward Smith of Highland Park has taken the Ed Jacobs house for August. She is expecting to entertain Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Creigh this week-end. Just north of the Jacobs cottage the Milton Matters of Marion, Ind., are occupying the John Matter guesthouse until Sept. 1.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Ford of Winnetka arrived this week for a vacation in the Marshall Rogers home still farther north along the Eagle harbor shore. Mr. and Mrs. George Mulford of Evanston and the latter's brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Judd Biddle of Kansas City, Mo., spent the early part of August in the Rogers house. Next door to Mrs. Ford is her friend, Mrs. Richard Crow of Winnetka, who is in Ephraim for a month with her young son. Mr. Crow will join them for week-ends.

• • •

Mrs. James A. Field and her son, Walker, have moved into their log guesthouse in order to make it possible for Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Bournique and their daughter, Miss Helen Bournique, to occupy their large house during August. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Collins gave a party last week at their Fish Creek home for their guest, Victor Granados, a composer in his own right and the son of the very famous composer, Enrique Granados. At their hillside summer place in Ephraim Mr. and Mrs. T. E. D. Bradley are entertaining their son-in-law and daughter, the Rev. and Mrs. John Rhind of Columbus, O., and their granddaughter, Jacqueline Avent of Scarsdale, N. Y. Near by their log guesthouse is being occupied by Mrs. Bradley's son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Nelson, with their two daughters, Virginia and Roseann, and their friends, Mr. and Mrs. George Terwillemer and their daughter, Marcia, all of De Kalb, Ill.

On Wednesday of the last week Mrs. Arthur Byfield gave a large tea for her many friends in the village honoring her mother, Mrs. L. C. Abbott, and her cousin, Mrs. Frederick Wahrer, both of Marshalltown, Ia., who are her house guests. Labagatelle, the Byfield home, will again be the center of activity next Saturday, when a musical will be held there for members of the Peninsula Arts association and their guests. Appearing on the program will be Mrs. William Foote, who is here from Connecticut with her two young children, spending the summer with her mother, Mrs. Martin D. Hardin. Her sister-in-law, Mrs. Parker C. Hardin, has also been here since early July.

Dr. Parker C. Hardin, a lieutenant colonel with the armed forces, is now in charge of an evacuation hospital in Australia. Recently the Rev. and Mrs. Martin D. Hardin Jr. and their small daughter came from Elmira, N. Y., to be with their relatives here for their vacation. Keeping relatives and friends entertained has been no problem for most of the homeowners. Last week members of the Chicago north shore colony in the village were guests at the Herbert Sanborn home in honor of Mr. Sanborn's birthday following cocktails at Deep Woods, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Lord.

Monday about 80 members of the Peninsula Art association and their guests were privileged to visit Bjorklinden, the Baileys Harbor summer place, owned by Mr. and Mrs. Donald Boynton, as well as Miss Genevieve Burkes' Baileys Harbor summer home and extensive rock garden built on the natural rock ledge overlooking the village and Lake Michigan. At Bjorklinden Mrs. Boynton not only permitted the garden walk participants to view the small chapel which is nearing completion but graciously explained the design and theme being carried out in its construction and decoration, the execution of which has been absorbing her artistic talent during the last several seasons.

On Thursday evening of the last week every one on the Peninsula was invited to The Junipers, the Fish Creek home of Mr. and Mrs. William Ryan, to hear Norbert W. Boeder, director of the Kenosha Art museum, and to see his colored slides entitled "Nature Trails and Tales of Wisconsin." The event was a benefit for the Ridges sanctuary, some slides of which were included in Mr. Boeder's collection early in the season. Thru the efforts of Mrs. Alfred Kieckhofer of Milwaukee, the Ridges received a grant of $1,200 from the National Federation of Garden Clubs. In keeping with the interests indicated by the majority of Door county visitors in the natural beauties of Wisconsin another side of nature was shown this week-end at the Ephraim village hall, when Murl Deusing of the Milwaukee museum brought his colored film, "Wild Wings," to the village for the enjoyment of any who wished to know more of Wisconsin birds.

Thoughts of entertainment, except for an occasional fishing trip or swim, are far from the minds of young Frederick and Alfred Wolfe this summer. Under the guidance of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Wolfe, and their grandfather, Dr. Frederick Stock, the boys have undertaken to raise 2,000 broad breasted bronze turkeys. So interested are the boys in their project that they have pitched a tent, where they sleep near the nervous birds in order to ward off sudden danger which might cause panic during the night. Traps for great horned owls and a faithful dog to frighten off foxes serve as added protection. From early morning until late evening the boys are busy providing the care essential to change the tiny day old birds of May 10 to the adult turkeys ready for the Thanksgiving season. Dr. Stock has been at his place here most of the summer watching the turkey enterprise with intense interest, altho this last week he has had to be away to conduct three concerts, last Sunday at Interlochen, Mich., and this week-end at Ravinia and Grant parks. Mrs. Wolfe accompanied him on the Chicago trip.

One of the favorite pastimes of visitors to Nova Scotia is to sail in the protected harbors along the more than 5,000 miles of deeply indented coastline.

Hotel Rooms to Be Available in St. Petersburg

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla.—Under a deluge of inquiries regarding fall and winter tourist accommodations here, the city information bureau has put a battery of stenographers at work informing correspondents that adequate hotel and apartments rooms will be available.

St. Petersburg's designation as an army aviation replacement center has given force to the rumor that this resort will be unable to entertain its usual crowd of sun worshippers. Altho several thousand trainees have been sent here, the number, it asserted, is a drop in the bucket compared with the quarter million visitors for which accommodations exist.

The chamber of commerce is advising motorists living in states where gasoline has not been rationed that gas tanks should be filled in Alabama, or as near to the Florida state line as possible. At Tallahassee the motorist may then obtain a gas rationing card which will enable him to drive to St. Petersburg.

All-Expense Tours of Yosemite End Sept. 1

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK, Col.—Effective Sept. 1, the Horseshoe route between Fresno and Yosemite valley is to be discontinued for this season. This will eliminate all-expense tours for the rest of the year. The park will remain open and the Yosemite Transportation system's buses are to operate daily in each direction between Merced and the valley. Accommodations will continue to be available at the Ahwahnee, Yosemite lodge, and Camp Curry, but the last named will close for the season on Sept. 9.

Controls 100 Miles of Road.

The longest continuous "centralized traffic control" installation on any American railroad is the 105 mile section of the Burlington route between Denver and Akron, Colo. A dispatcher at Brush, Colo., can operate signals and switches over the entire section, stopping trains or switching them onto sidings as traffic conditions require.

VOICE OF THE TRAVELER

Letters regarding travel conditions and experiences are welcomed. Please keep them brief. Address: Travel Editor, Chicago Tribune.

WONDERFUL WISCONSIN.

Maywood, Ill., Aug. 17.—To the Travel Editor: After reading your write-up of southwestern Wisconsin, Prairie du Chien, and the Wisconsin river, we determined to take that tour, and we did, this last week-end. All the expectations that we had had from reading your article were realized, and many more.

The scenery from Cross Plains to Platteville, Wis., was in every way comparable to that of the mountain foothills of Kentucky. The three state parks at which we stopped, Tower Hill, Wyalusing, and Nelson Dewey, afforded indescribably magnificent views and panoramas. The scene from Wyalusing over the confluence of the Wisconsin and Mississippi rivers was far grander than any which we have ever seen from Illinois or other Wisconsin parks, with the possible exception of Peninsula park in Door county. Notwithstanding this, the greatest "crowd" encountered at any of these three parks was approximately 20 persons, altho all the playgrounds had facilities for hundreds.

I should like to know why some localities, having much less scenic value, are constantly jammed, when such beautiful places are so completely avoided!

If, by chance, there are some Tribune readers who will want to take this week-end tour this fall, allow me to give the route. After leaving Madison, and until state line is recrossed at Beloit, you will not have one boring mile.

U. S. 14 to Gotham, Wis., stopping at Tower Hill State park at Spring Green.

Wis. 60 along the river to Prairie du Chien. While here be sure to visit the Villa Louis—an interesting and beautiful place.

Wis. 35 to Wyalusing State park.

Continue on Wis. 35 to Bloomington, thru the hills.

Wis. 133 to Nelson Dewey State park at Cassville. Be sure your auto can take hills, for the park road spirals up steeply.

Wis. 81 to Beloit and the Illinois line.

U. S. 51 to Rockford, and U. S. 20 home.

D. SHEA.

APPRECIATION.

Wisconsin Dells, Wis., Aug. 3.—To the Travel Editor: All of us at the Dells join in expressing our appreciation of your splendid article in yesterday's SUNDAY TRIBUNE. We are unanimous in voting it the best ever. It was exactly the sort of story that we had been hoping would some day be written about the Wisconsin Dells and its scenic attractions.

RALPH W. CONNOR.

HE WANTS WARNER.

Chicago, Aug. 13.—To the Travel Editor: As a long time reader of, and admirer of, THE TRIBUNE, I wish you would have Mason Warner's articles appear every Sunday, as formerly, instead of spasmodically, as at the present time. Mr. Warner is so widely traveled, and so well informed, that his accounts of his travels have a universal appeal. I am sure many other readers are with me in asking you to comply with my request.

A TRIBUNE WRITER ENLISTS.

Jefferson Barracks, Mo., Aug. 16.—To the Travel Editor: Just in case any Tribune readers who have happened to note my Wisconsin stories in the Travel section are wondering what has become of me, please let them know that this is my present address: Pvt. C. P. Holway, U. S. A., 31st Technical School Squadron [Sp.], Flight A, Jefferson Barracks, Mo.

There are quite a few of us here from Wisconsin. Now that we've spent some time in this part of the world, we know, better than ever, how appealing the summer weather in our state must be to people who have to live down here the year round.

I should like to hear from any one having a similar hobby.

Santos: Biggest Coffee Export Port in World

[This is 50th article of series on South America. The next will appear in an early issue.

By Mason Warner.

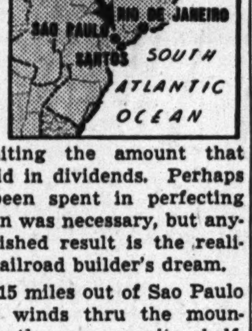
SANTOS, BRAZIL

Everybody knows that Brazil is the greatest coffee growing country in the world, but some persons are not aware of the fact that the state of Sao Paulo is the greatest coffee growing district in Brazil, and that Santos, on the seacoast, 40 miles by rail from the city of Sao Paulo, is the greatest coffee shipping port in the world. Before the war this city annually exported approximately 10,000,000 bags, each containing 132 pounds.

Most South American excursionists go by sea from Rio de Janeiro and make the layover stop here, thus being compelled to undergo a too brief side trip from their ship to Sao Paulo. As we had a two weeks' sojourn in Sao Paulo, my grandson and I decided to reverse ordinary procedure and enjoy the visit here as a side trip.

• • •

The coffee hauling railway between Sao Paulo and Santos manifests more money spent per mile for its building than any other bit of railroad engineering on earth. The government concession granting the construction rights to a British corporation contained a proviso limiting the amount that could be paid in dividends. Perhaps more has been spent in perfecting the road than was necessary, but anyhow the finished result is the realization of a railroad builder's dream.



For 10 or 15 miles out of Sao Paulo the railway winds thru the mountains, frequently on a granite shelf. Looking out of a car window, one sees sheer cliffs towering 500 to 1,000 feet; from the window on the opposite side one looks into 1,000 feet ravines. Deep gullies split the landscape to the horizon.

The motive power moving the train for the ascent and descent from the 2,500 foot plateau of Sao Paulo to the sea level of Santos comes by an extremely competent cable that never hesitates or falters when the grip takes hold.

• • •

Many costly tunnels and expensive bridges ate into the original British investment of billions of reis that went into the original roadbed construction. But since then excess profits over allowed dividends have permitted the building of an abundance of concrete sluices and spillways to guide overflowing mountain streams underneath the tracks in the rainy season. You ride over a masterful example of what concrete structure can achieve with unlimited funds when you ride over the first 20 miles from Sao Paulo, descending on the way from an altitude of 2,500 feet to sea level. Out of the mountainous region an ordinary locomotive takes hold of the train.

The stations are handsome buildings, with grounds adorned by flowers and shrubs. The 10 miles of flat country nearest Santos are given over to banana plantations. The trees are no taller than a man, but they bear such large and heavy stems of fruit that one expects them to break down under the weight. The bananas are small and good, but not so sweet and rich flavored as those grown in the Amazon country.

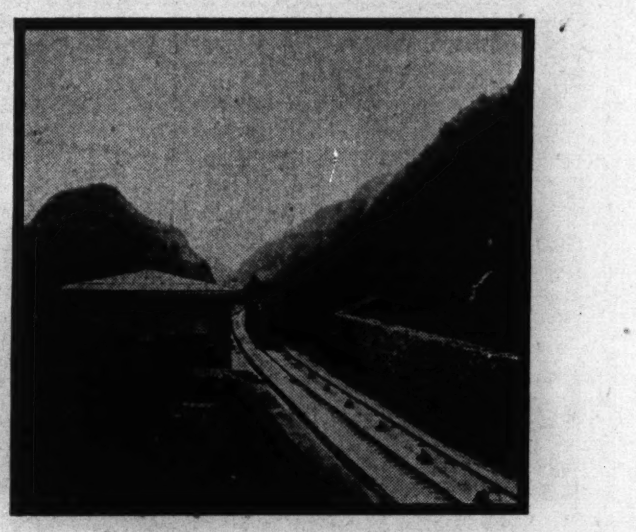
Census reports estimate the Santos population at 136,000. The city looks to be larger than that because of its many modern buildings, extensive wharves, inviting parks, artistic monuments, splendid avenues, and wealthy suburbs. In addition to its commercial activity as a coffee mart, it boasts of fine beaches. As a holiday resort it is gaining popularity. Thousands of visitors from Sao Paulo and interior towns enjoy its bathing facilities winter and summer, for the water is never too cold or too warm.

Hotel accommodations are comfortable, with good food at moderate prices. For some choosey persons there is an impediment to starting a perfect day here. They encounter it at the breakfast table if they drink coffee. In the United States we are accustomed to coffee blended from the crops of various countries. In South America only the product of that particular country is served. Brazalian coffee, straight and unblended, is sometimes a disappointment.

• • •

In a manner of speaking, it may be said that Santos lives on coffee, for all its people derive their living from it, directly or indirectly. Magnificent homes in the suburbs are occupied by absentee plantation owners, whose properties in the mountains are superintended by overseers. Hundreds of brokers, shippers, importers, exporters, and resident buyers for foreign concerns fill the offices in downtown buildings. Thousands of dock laborers are engaged in transferring freight and loading ocean liners, and yet the story that voyagers can tell when a ship is approaching Santos by the aroma of coffee in the air detected far out at sea is only a traveler's untrue tale, for the unroasted bean has no aroma.

The Coffee exchange is a none too large and far from imposing building blocking the end of and affording a view of Coffee Row, a street devoted almost exclusively to the trade.



COFFEE RAILWAY
This road, running from Santos to Sao Paulo, Brazil, cost more per mile to build than did any other railroad on earth. Described by Mason Warner on this page.

400th Anniversary of California to Be Feted in September

LOS ANGELES, Cal.—California, as the white man knows it, becomes 400 years old in September.

One of the celebrations will be a parade of army, navy, and marine units Sept. 9 in San Diego. That city has changed quite a bit from the place Juan Rodriguez Cabrillo saw when he poked two tiny ships into San Diego bay and discovered California in 1542.

Up the coast Cabrillo found intriguing islands whose Indians fought his men. An isle which he named San Salvador is now Santa Catalina, in peacetime a playland using flying fish, glass-bottom boats, and the graveyards of these same belligerent Indians as travel lures.

Across the channel Cabrillo found a broad bay ringed by so many Indian campfires that he called it "Bahia de los Fumos" [Bay of the Smokes]. This is Santa Monica bay, now known for the bathing beaches of Santa Monica, Venice, Manhattan, Hermosa, and Redondo and the film stars' seaside colony of Malibu.

Sailing north within sight of the scenic coast, Cabrillo found a village of Indians using sea-going canoes. This was on the coastal stretch where now are the cities of Ventura and Santa Barbara. Visitors today ride water skis where the Indians once paddled.

$60,000 Bathhouse Dedicated on Lake Front at Muskegon

Muskegon, Mich., Aug. 22 [Special].—With State Treasurer Phil Frey of Fremont delivering the address, Muskegon State park's new $60,000 bathhouse on the Lake Michigan front was dedicated this afternoon in the presence of 20,000 visitors.

Completion of the structure marks another step in the Michigan Conservation commission's plan to make its series of lake front parks—beginning with Holland State park on the south and ranging thru Grand Haven, Muskegon, Silver Lake, Pentwater, Ludington, Orchard Beach [Manistee], and Sleeping Bear Point parks to the north—the premier vacation centers of Chicagoland.

Yachts and motor craft from the White Lake, Muskegon Lake, and Spring Lake Yacht clubs added color to the scene of the dedication. The speaking program included State Senator Don Vanderwerp, chairman of the senate finance committee, former Gov. A. J. Groesbeck of Detroit, original sponsor of the park; P. J. Hoffmaster, director of the state conservation department; Mayor C. C. Johnson, and C. A. Sirrine.

Louis Lunsford, chairman of the chamber of commerce parks committee, which sponsored the event, reminded the crowd that 20 years ago Muskegon, virtually surrounded by water, did not have one foot of publicly owned waterfront available for recreational purposes. Now it has more than eight miles of bathing beach, including all the Lake Michigan waterfront in the corporate limits.

STEAMERS—PLANES

Michigan Has No Priorities on Enjoyment

By Frederic Babcock.

SPRING LAKE, MICH.

"Any one who has tried to survive the steamy heat of a Washington summer will realize the advantages of relocating the national capital in Chicago, or even in Grand Haven, Mich., where the lake breezes are perhaps even more favorable." . . . This from an editorial in THE TRIBUNE of last Tuesday.

Our summertime journey along the American Riviera — otherwise, that part of Michigan lying not far from Lake Michigan—has convinced us that the editorial writer was right, except in one particular. . . . He should have left out the "perhaps" in the statement about the breezes being more favorable here than in the old home town. . . . We were sweltering when we left Chicago, and we sweltered all the day thru Hammond, Gary, and Michigan City. . . . It was not until we rounded the southern tip of the lake and started up the eastern shore that we realized that something extra had been added. . . . Over on this side of the lake it's as cool as an American fighter contemplating what he's going to do when he gets to Berlin or Tokio.

• • •

There are no wartime priorities on the full enjoyment of a vacation in western Michigan. . . . From early spring until late-autumn this region can boast that it has everything needed for the comfort and convenience of defense workers and others on holiday bent. . . . In these days of short trips and long stays—as contrasted to the prewar days of long tours and overnight stops—only one other state, Wisconsin, can rival this one as a goal for Chicagoans and other midwesterners who want to get the most out of the brief recreation time at their disposal. . . . At least, that's the opinion of one who has had the privilege of viewing nearly everything that the travel field has to offer.

TRAVEL-LOG

Our first stop after St. Joseph and Benton Harbor, with their blossoms and their House of David, was Tabor farm, near Sodus. . . . There J. J. Bachunas, former Chicago newspaper man, has worked out a "back to the land" movement that is different from any others we have encountered. . . . His emphasis is on the simple life, and the informal. . . . Thoreau himself couldn't have demanded much more. . . . In the midst of the garden that is Berrien county Mr. Bachunas has transformed his old-time farm into a series of cottages grouped around a clubhouse and a swimming pool and adjoining a golf course and acres of vineyard and orchard. . . . The result is a rare combination of means for rest and recreation.

• • •

Right now everything is ripening into early autumn splendor. . . . Tabor keeps open until Nov. 1, and in the meanwhile the grapes, the peaches, the apples, the pears, and the plums are putting on their annual performance. . . . This performance draws the customers back to the farm year after year. . . . With the owner's permission, they raid vineyard and orchard for all they can eat.

These customers refuse to bother about formal wear and such. . . . They're more interested in the food, the scenery along the banks of the St. Joseph river, and the golfing. . . . Most of them are inclined to give Joe Bachunas all the credit for creating a near-ideal resort. . . . But some of them realize that Mrs. Bachunas, in charge of the cooking; Mr. and Mrs. Mike Brewster, and Miss Joanna Roberts, who look after the other details, also have played important rôles in bringing Joe's idea to its present day success

Joe calls his 160 acre farm "your country home." . . . His guests from the city feel the same way about it. . . . They are treated, not as customers, but as members of the family. . . . The treatment is particularly relished at harvest time.

• • •

Northward to Coloma, Watervliet, and Paw Paw lake. . . . The two towns stand near two ends of the lake and share in the prosperity it brings. . . . Paw Paw, covering some 2,000 acres, is big enough to provide all kinds of water sports. . . . Motorboat and outboard racing predominate, but along the shore there are all the other sports facilities that lure the summer tourists. . . . It's an old resort, as middle western places go—its yacht club was started 35 years ago—but there is nothing out of date about the entertainment and the accommodations. . . . Right now it is entertaining crowds of hay fever victims.

South Haven, the next stop, likewise is an old-timer, but it likewise has young ideas about taking care of its visitors. . . . There are two golf courses, a modern yacht club, and plenty of sandy beaches on Lake Michigan. . . . Its big event of the year is the Peach festival, with a street dance, parades, games, the inevitable crowning of the festival queen, and free peaches for everybody. . . . All this will take place next Saturday.

• • •

Saugatuck, home of the art colony, and Holland, home of the tulips, pass in review as we hurry on to Grand Haven and Spring Lake. . . . Somebody must have tipped off those neighboring cities that we were on our way. . . . We were met by Hugh Gray, secretary-manager of the West Michigan Tourist and Resort association [who had just "happened" to drop in from Grand Rapids]; Almon McCall, editor of the Grand Haven Daily Tribune; W. L. Stribley, secretary of the Grand Haven Chamber of Commerce; Jack Thoma, resort manager of the Grand Haven Chamber of Commerce, and A. M. Miller, Grand Haven business man. . . . It was a pleasure to meet all of them—but especially Mr. Miller. . . . He has a motor launch [or maybe it's called a cruiser], and he is generous about its use.

We all piled in for a cruise of Spring lake and along the shore of Lake Michigan. . . . The scenery was incomparable. . . . Gardens, estates, and greenery beckoned to us as we made our way on the smaller lake, and great stretches of bathing beaches, dunes, and yacht infested waters highlighted the seascape on the bigger lake.

• • •

Like Paw Paw and South Haven, Grand Haven is an old resort, and this year it has been renewing its youth. . . . New yacht slips are being built, there is a splendid pier for fishing, and everything has been spruced up for the tourist. . . . But we wondered about next summer, when there will be fewer auto loads of tourists out of Chicago, Grand Rapids, and other nearby cities. . . . One solution may be an auto ferry service connecting both Chicago and Milwaukee with both Muskegon and Grand Haven. . . . Such a project, we were told, already is being talked about, if not actually planned.

We went over to Prospect Point, across Spring lake from the golf club, and here we ran into Joe Bachunas again. . . . Now that he's got Tabor farm running the way he wants it, he has taken over this old-fashioned resort, redecorated and refurnished its hotel, built a lot of new cabins, and is installing a yacht slip and planning a sandy beach. . . . He's already brought the place out of its doldrums. . . . If he can make it as attractive as he's made Tabor he'll have the thanks of a lot of people. . . . And it looks as if he can.

• • •

We're en route to Muskegon, Ludington, Traverse City, and points north. . . . Of that part of our tour we'll be writing for next SUNDAY'S TRIBUNE—provided we can tear ourselves away from the scenery and the hospitality of Grand Haven and Spring Lake.

THEY DIDN'T CUT DOWN THE OLD PINE TREE

Locomotive firemen were responsible for the survival of this lone tree, growing out of a granite boulder near the Lincoln highway between Cheyenne and Laramie, Wyo. Years ago, when the tree was getting its start, passing firemen made a practice of dousing it with water. At that time the original roadbed of the Union Pacific ran where the highway runs today.

Four of us, all interested in fishing, have been studying the map of Wisconsin, and we find many duplications in names of lakes. This has resulted in quite a bit of confusion, as far as we are concerned. I imagine others have been similarly confused. We would be interested in learning how often such names as Bass, Long, and Mud occur in that state. Can you inform us? —S. K. K.

You can take your pick of 59 lakes named Bass in Wisconsin. Of if you go in for equestrian things, you can find 16 lakes bearing the name of Horse, Horseshoe, or Horsehead.

Whether this duplication reflects a lack of originality on the part of the loggers, fur trappers, and other early explorers may be debatable, but it is a source of concern to the Wisconsin Geographic board. In coöperation with the United States Board of Geographical Names, the state body is sponsoring a series of rechristenings.

Of course, in a state with 7,000 lakes, a large percentage of duplication can be expected. Recently 78 name changes was declared official in Vilas county alone.

Some of Wisconsin's waters have been known by several names, none of them official. This is a partial list of those due for a rebaptising, with the number of repetitions in each case: Bass, 59; Long, 40; Mud, 36; Twin, 28; Round, 27; Silver, 21; Sand, 20; Pine, 20; Pickerel, 20; Rice, 17; Crooked, 16; Spring, 15; Island, 14; Bear, 13; Clear, 12; Deer, 12; Lost, 11; Goose, 9; Loon, 9; Crystal, 9; Pike, 8; Cedar, 7; Clam, 7; Fish, 7; Spider, 7; Turtle, 7; Grass, 6; Cranberry, 5; Duck, 5; Green, 5; Half Moon, 5; Swamp, 5.

Not quite 200 miles.

I have been told that somewhere in Pennsylvania there is a marker identifying the site where the first American resistance to the English crown took place. Please give details. —G. M.

The marker is to be seen just off the Lincoln highway at a point 12 miles west of Chambersburg. It is on the site of Fort Loudon, where a band of early settlers forced the surrender of a British garrison.

Mackinac Island's Land Rentals Cut

Mackinac Island, Mich., Aug. 22.—Land rentals which summer residents pay the state of Michigan for property leased here were reduced 50 per cent today by the Mackinac Island State Park commission.

The action may spur the building of summer cottages on state owned property here as a postwar development. The plan is sponsored by Park Commissioners Walter W. Russell of Mount Pleasant and William F. Doyle of East Lansing.

"With rental charges cut in half, persons of moderate means will be able to put up small summer homes on ground leased from the state," Mr. Doyle said.

"The reduction in rent was in line with the recent action of the Mackinac Island city administration in reducing assessments on summer homes. The day of Mackinac being a summer resort for the wealthy only has ended. Several hundred acres of state property will be available now for cottages, with extremely low ground rentals."

Bright Umbrellas Greet Arrivals in Wisconsin Town

CAMBRIDGE, Wis.—This is called "the umbrella vacation spot," and there's a reason.

Travelers who are not forewarned stop and look again when they arrive in this community of 800 persons. They are greeted by scores of large blue and yellow umbrellas, dotting the lawns of residences and nearby farms. A 7 foot span extends from every lamp post in the business district.

In the heart of the southern Wisconsin lakelands region, this section has been a family vacation place for many years. One and one-half miles long and a mile wide, Lake Ripley is spring fed, with gradually sloping white sand beaches. Nearly every summer diversion is available.

Scenery There Even If You Fail to Catch Fish

By John A. Menaugh.

The attractions of vast Lake of the Woods in west Ontario lie not only in the possibility that one may catch fish there, including the high powered muskellunge, but also in the wildness of the scene thereabouts.

If one fails to catch muskies he always can feast his eyes upon the rocky lake shores, their massive boulders apparently scattered by a giant's hand. In fact, much of the shoreline, which totals thousands of miles, is solid rock, or what once was solid rock, but now cracked by ages of weathering. From the rock cleavages sprout pine and spruce and other trees that seem to sap their sustenance from the bare stone itself. In some places the rocky shores rise sheer from the water to a height of a hundred feet or more.

The rocks of the Lake of the Woods country are known geologically as Laurentian. They constitute the oldest group of granite intrusive rocks of the Archean of Canada—so old, and subjected to so many changes, that no fossils are found in them.

• • •

I went to Lake of the Woods to seek the muskellunge, and failed of this object, yet was well repaid by the rugged, rocky beauty of the sprawling lake's shore, its marvelous vistas of winding inlets and tortuous channels, its myriad of islands [there are said to be 16,000 there], and the wild life with which the woods and air teem.

Many aquatic birds, such as ducks, mergansers, herons, loons, and gulls are seen on every hand. Huge hawks wheel effortlessly above the treetops and bald rocks. The common red deer are everywhere, and no day is complete without the sight of a moose or two feeding in shallow water or wading belly deep to escape the flies. If one is sharp eyed he may catch a glimpse of a retreating bear.

All my life I had longed to fish the Lake of the Woods waters, where, almost every year, record muskellunge are caught. Our own north woods of Wisconsin and Minnesota have attractions aplenty for the fisherman and vacationist, but, from what I had read and had been told, they were relatively tame beside the Canadian fishing country.

• • •

This summer came the opportunity to try the Canadian waters. For headquarters up there my fishing companion and I chose a well recommended fishing camp on Dryberry lake, which is a spacious body of water near by and draining into Lake of the Woods by means of Dryberry river, Berry lake, and Berry creek.

Dryberry lake was reached by a pleasant motor trip by way of Madison, Duluth, Virginia, International Falls, and the east shore of Lake of the Woods. No inconvenience was encountered in passing thru the customs office at Fort Francis, across the Rainy river from International Falls. Sixteen gallons of gasoline was our quota in Canada, but 16 Canadian gallons are equal to 20 of our gallons, and, since we had filled our tank at International Falls, we were obliged to buy only nine gallons in Canada, on a little side trip taken to the attractive town of Kenora, at the upper end of Lake of the Woods.

Our stopping place on Dryberry lake, reached by a 10 mile boat trip across Berry lake and up Dryberry river and a half mile portage, was found to be situated on a sheltered bay, the only camp actually on the shore of Dryberry lake.

This lake, which contains more than 100 islands and is cut up into numerous bays, is as wild and apparently untouched as the day the first white man visited it. On some spots of its sheer rock shores are prehistoric picture writings of the people who inhabited the area hundreds of years ago. The cold waters contain lake trout that can be trolled for in deep water in midsummer, pickerel [which the guides call northern pike], and muskellunge. The muskellunge generally are found in the north bays, in waters slightly discolored by vegetation. The main part of the lake is clear as crystal.

Regardless of the fact that my companion and I were provided with an expert guide, one "Slim," we failed to catch a muskellunge, altho I did connect unsuccessfully with what appeared to be a 25 pounder which took a swipe at my lure—the only musky we almost caught in the entire trip. We were lucky in catching lake trout and pickerel, and, despite the fact that some fishermen look down upon the pickerel as not too gamey, we found them hard fighters and quite tasty when prepared in Slim's frying pan.

Our second week was given over to a trip into the heart of Lake of the Woods, entered thru a long, narrow bay, after a boat trip on Berry lake and two portages. On this cruise there were five of us, including our own party of two and a guide and an added starter from Ohio and his guide, one Bill. We went by two boats, powered with outboard motors, about 50 miles into Lake of the Woods. We went to the mouth of Astron bay, reputed to be teeming with muskellunge. We camped upon a tiny island, slept in sleeping bags in tents, consumed all the food that two large packsacks would hold, enjoyed the rare evenings of the Canadian north, with daylight lingering far beyond 10 o'clock, and had a rip-roaring time. But we caught no muskellunge.

Time and again huge members of this species rose to our lures, leisurely looked us over, and swam away. Some of these appeared to be of 40 pounds weight or more. All were curious, but none hungry. This was a keen disappointment, but, being experienced in these matters, we knew the frequent indifference of this breed of fish.

Muskellunge are temperamental. They often engage in prolonged fasts. When they do, they seem to do it collectively. Also, the water must be just right—not too cold, not too warm.

• • •

When we were at Lake of the Woods the water had not yet warmed sufficiently, perhaps, to make the muskies want to bite. At any rate, we saw many and caught none, altho small mouth bass, pickerel, and walleyed pike provided us with plenty of eating and a fair amount of sport.

We explored many miles of water, saw much wild life, took several hundred feet of colored movies, and were not rained upon once.

We hope to go back sometime.
